THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Circulates through Pennsylvania, and all the other States of the Union, rising 7000 papers every publication.

Vol. VI—No. 328. PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 10, 1827. Terms, $2 in advance.

PUBLISHED BY ATKINSON & ALEXANDER, No. 112 CHESNUT STREET, BETWEEN THIRD & FOURTH STREETS, AND TWO DOORS BELOW THE POST-OFFICE—[T] COUNTING-ROOM ON HUDSON'S ALLEY.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

STANZAS.

How oft have I slipped at Parnassus' fount,
Where the muses their wreaths do entwine;
There often sweet moments of pleasure I count,
On joys that can never be mine.

For sorrow has early marked me for a prey,
And grief has corroded my heart;
Tho' I sometimes am cheerful and appear to be gay,
Yet from sorrow I never can part.

My harp I oft waken my grief to beguile,
And smile as its wild notes do flow;
Ah! yes, at the sound of its wildness I smile,
Yet it never can lessen my woe.

For a sad disappointment has blighted my joy,
And sorrow will ever be mine;
I dreamt of sweet pleasure, unkind as alloy,
And for roses, now thorns do I twine.

Yes, my sweet smiling cupes forever are fled;
My dreams of dear pleasure are over;
Now thorns and the cypress I place in their stead,
And sing of sweet roses no more.

GLORVINA.

WHY DO WE LIVE?

Why do we live? since every hour
Gives birth but to its own dark sorrow;
To-day, of trouble's cloud full low'r,
To-morrow, on us on the morrow.

Why do we live? since every joy,
Is but the light shade to its anguish,
For bliss, without its dark alloy,
In vain else our hearts may languish.

Is it for pleasure, that we live?
That fire-fly light, that meteor's brightness,
To say 'twill but a moment give,
Then soul, where's all thy joy and lightness?

Is it for fame we live? such fame
As mortals give—lived not the story
Both but to die, seek not a name
From man, for with him dies thy glory.

Is it for friendship that we live?
Ah, friendship's words are kindly spoken
In hours of joy, but will they give
Their balm to hearts which grief hath broken.

Is it for love we live? a dream,
A hurried dream as fast as fleeting:
We sleep, and all doth brightness seem,
We wake, and darkness is our greeting.

If then, there's nought of bliss below,
If love is but a dream's illusion;
In hours of joy, if friendship grow,
If dawn of woe is its conclusion;

If fame is but a mortal's breath,
And pleasure but a morning vapour,
We surely will not care when death
Puts out our sickly, glimmering taper.

We surely will not live so meanly,
When from the world and all we leave is
But joy, that we have lived in vain,
And die that we may live forever. IMOGINE.

SELECTED.

TO WILLIAM.

BY WILLIAM P. S. WOOD.

It was but yesterday my child, thy little heart beat high,
And I first scorn'd the warning voice that told me thou must die.
I saw thee move with active bound, with spirits light and free,
And infant grace and beauty threw their every charm on thee.

Upon the dewy field I saw thy early footsteps fly,
Unfettered as the native bird that cleaves the rosy sky,
And oft as the sunrise gale blew back thy shining hair,
Thy cheek displayed the red rose tinge that health had painted there.

When wakened as my heart had been, I could not but rejoice,
To hear upon the morning wind, the music of thy voice,
Now echoing in the careless laugh, now melting down to tears,
Was like the sounds I used to hear in young and happier years.

Thanks for that memory to thee, my little lovely one,
To all remains of former bliss, that care cannot destroy;
I listened as the mariner suspends the outbound oars,
To catch the fairest gale that flows from off his native shore.

I loved thee and my heart was blest—but ere the day was spent,
I saw thy light and graceful limbs in drooping illness bent,
And shuddered as I cast a look upon thy fainting head,
For all the glow of health was gone, and life was almost fled.

The glance upon the marble brow made known that hope was vain,
I knew the quickly wasting lamp almost its light had given,
Thy cheek was pale, thy snow white lips were quite shrunk apart,
And life in every passing breath seemed gushing from the heart.

And when I could not keep the tear from gathering in my eye,
Thy little hand crept gently mine in token of reply;
To ask one more exchange of love, thy look was upward cast,
And in that long, long burning kiss thy happy spirit passed.

I trusted I should not have lived to bid farewell to thee,
And nature in my heart declares it ought not so to be;
I hoped that thou within the grave my weary head should lay,
And lived believed when I was gone, for many a happy day.

With trembling hand I vainly tried thy dying eyes to close,
And how I envied in that hour thy calm and sleep repose.

For I was left alone on earth, with pain and grief oppress'd,
And thou wast with the exiled, "where the weary are at rest."
Yes, I am left alone on earth—but I will not repine
Because a spirit lov'd so well is dearer blest than mine;
My fate may darken as it will, I shall not much deplore,
Since thou art where the ills of life can never reach thee more.

CHARACTER OF BOLIVAR.

It was on the 15th of Oct. that I was introduced to Bolivar. I cannot say that I felt not, at the moment of introduction, the peculiar sensation which the presence of one who had filled the world with his deeds, naturally inspired. If I had any sentiment approaching to humility on the occasion, arising from awe inspired by the moral influence of the man, it was dissipated with the mode in which he received me, with a cordial downright English shake of the hand. It is the historian's business to do justice to his general character: I can only describe how I saw him at a short interview, when not under the influence of excitement of any kind. As a man, he had, in my view, achieved more than Washington. He had delivered his country without foreign assistance, and under every possible disadvantage. No France had tendered her armies, and her wealth to aid him. No Franklins, and Henrys, and Jeffersons, were at his right hand, nor the stern uncompromising virtue of a New England race. The ignorance and utter want of experience of those around him, both in civil and military affairs, threw every thing upon his genius; he dared nobly and succeeded. His talents in the field, and his invincible perseverance in spite of every obstacle, do not surpass his skill in raising resources for war, and impressing his fellow citizens with confidence in his ability and respect for his government as a chief of the people.—How he kept down and controlled faction, quelled mutinous dispositions, and having sacrificed every shilling of his fortune in the cause of his country, persuaded others to follow his example, is a problem difficult to solve. In these respects no one ever surpassed him. In the movement of large armies, with better formed materials, he may have been excelled, but in the passive qualities of the soldier, the rarest found united in the military character, few, or none, have equalled him. Hunger, thirst, torrid heat, mountain's cold, fatigue, long marches (in respect of distance from Caracas to Potosi, from the centre of the northern half of the torrid zone almost to the extreme limit of the southern on one occasion,) in desert and burning sands, all were borne by him and his followers with a patience never outdone by similar, or any other means, and crowned with complete success.—He has been accused of ambitious views towards absolute power, time can alone settle this point. He has yet shown no such disposition, but rather the reverse.

The person of this extraordinary man has perhaps been before described; he is in make slender, but of an active and enduring frame, about five feet seven inches in height; his features rather sharp, nose aquiline, and expression firm but not striking in the way of intellect; moreover, his face generally bears marks of hardship, and is care-worn. His eyes are penetrating rather than intelligent, and he seldom suffers a stranger to get a view of them; at least I found in the interviews I had the honor to hold with him, that this was the case so much, that it even lessened him in my estimation, as the habit of any one not looking you fairly in the face in society is apt to ala. His brow is wrinkled by thought and anxiety, so much, that a scowl seems almost always to dwell upon it. In giving an audience, sitting, as was his custom, he seemed to want the easy carriage of a person in such a situation, and had an awkward custom of passing his hands backwards and forwards over his knees. His delivery was very rapid, but in tone monotonous, and he by no means gave a stranger an opinion favorable to his urbanity. The qualities of a stern republican soldier must, however, be expected to differ from those of the courtier of the European school, who is seldom a hero; and it would be strange enough, if the person of Bolivar should not have been in any way tinctured with the stormy, warlike and singular character of the chequered scenes he had encountered.

Notwithstanding appearances are as I stated, and the disappointment as to air and aspect which I experienced on seeing him for the first time, his shake of the hand was cordial and frank as a soldier's should be, and in matters of business I found him without etiquette to the foreigner, easy of access, and very prompt in decision. He was remarkably quick in his perception of any subject laid before him, anticipating the narrator in the circumstances, and coming rapidly to the intended conclusion, by a sort of intuitive perception. His sense of justice, and his liberality to individuals who have suffered in the cause of independence, are well known. A Mr. W. Henderson had adventured a ship and cargo with his capital, and it was lost at Guayaquil, he was remunerated by the Liberator for his loss; this fact stands recorded in the books of a London House.—Capt. Andrew's Journey from Buenos Ayres.

ISLAND OF CEYLON.

Ceylon, might seem to be a paradise on earth. Gentle undulations of what in England might be called well dressed lawn (we speak of the South West quarter)—rivers, rapid, deep, clear—cocoa palms peeping forth from the vast tracts of jungle—and marking to an experienced eye the site of some sequestered village—mountain masses of no inconsiderable height, and of shapes the most fantastic—plants of all hues the choicest ornaments of an English hot house—precious stones of every variety, unless, perhaps, the emerald—such are some of the riches of Ceylon. But the picture has its deep shadows. Along the borders of those romantic streams there lurks an air, that no man can breathe long and live; a fact the more remarkable as the tanks or standing pools of the same country are said to exhale an atmosphere of health, and to one of these Kandy has been supposed to owe its comparative salubrity. Snakes and other reptiles are so abundant, so active, and so deadly that but few birds are seen, and, for the songsters of an English grove the traveller must be content to receive in exchange 'apes that mow and chatter at him,' as if the island were Prospero's. Female infanticide is reported to prevail in some districts to a considerable extent; and we can easily believe this of a country in which several brothers of the same family are accustomed to share the same wife; and to crown all, at night the blaze of the sacrifice, the drum and the drum, proclaim that those who worship at all, worship the devil. Yet with all the island holds a prospect of better things. The noble experiment of Sir Alexander Johnstone, as to the introduction of a species of jury trial, appears to have been crowned with most encouraging success.

The prejudice of cast is far less powerful than on the continent; and the Dutch had long ago established in it a system of parochial schools and parochial preaching, which though for some time fallen into decay, Bishop Heber hoped, with the concurrence of government which he solicited, to restore to more than former usefulness, and connect with the national church. Meanwhile, as a secondary measure, he moved the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge to establish one or more central schools in the island, for the board and education of a number of native Christian youths, who might thus be qualified to act as schoolmasters; and in case of promising talents become recruits for the college at Calcutta, thence return in due time, and shed blessings on their native island.

THE INDIAN SUMMER.

The month of November, in England, is describ-

The month of November, in England, is described as the most gloomy and cheerless portion of the year: its days heavy, dull, and damp; its nights clouded with dense fog, thick enough to be cut in slices. In the climate of New England, although not the mildest to the children of the season, it is far from being comfortless or unlovely. The forests are divested of their foliage, and the winds make melancholy sounds among the leafless branches. The wild revelry of storms, the majestic rushing of tempests, and the frost of coming winter, are blended with milder and more delightful and moonlit evenings, when the pure autumnal air breathes an invigorating freshness into the system. Usually, after the first onset of cold, the Indian Summer, as it is called, pays its annual visit, the weather becomes warm, the blue vapor comes over the hills, and an atmosphere as soft as that framed by the genial airs of spring, rests on the earth. The calm and mellow brightness of the mid-day is succeeded by a close as magnificent as the sunset of Italian skies, so often celebrated in enthusiastic verse. This beautiful time often continues many days, and at its termination, winter sets in with stern severity.

In the early periods of our history, when the Indian enemies lurked in the forests, and burst out from their ambuscades on the planter, the first settlers enjoyed little security, except in the winter, when the severity of the season prevented the incursions of the savages. The coming of winter was hailed as the commencement of peace by the early inhabitants of the country: they sallied out from the little forts and block-houses, in which they had been hemmed up, with the joyful feelings of prisoners escaping from confinement, and busily gathered in their harvests. To our ancestors, the snows of winter were more pleasant than the flowers of spring, as they brought the cessation of the horrors of war. But it often happened that the mild day of November afforded the red men another opportunity of visiting the settlements with those desolating blows, which burst like the lightning from the cloud, leaving the record of their effects in the blaze that followed the stroke. The activity of the red men during these periods, gave, as is supposed, the name of "Indian Summer" to those bright days, when autumn bestows its last parting favors.

THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS.

In eastern lands they talk in flowers,
And they tell in a garland their loves and cares:
Each blossom that blooms in their garden bowers,
On its leaves a mystic language bears.

The rose is the sign of joy and love,
Young blushing love in its earlier dawn;
And the mildness that suits the gentle dove,
From the myrtle's snowy flower is drawn.

Innocence shines in the lily's bell,
Pure as a heart in his native heaven;
Fame's bright star and glory's swell,
Ply the glossy leaf of the bay are given.

The silent, soft, and humble heart
In the violet's hidden sweetness breathes;
And the tender soul that cannot part,
A twine of evergreen fondly wreathes.

The cypress that daily shades the grave,
In sorrow that mourns her bitter fate;
And faith that a thousand ills can brave,
Speaks in the blue leaves, forget-me-not.

Then gather a wreath from the garden bowers,
And tell the wish of thy heart in flowers.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

REMARKS UPON THE CONDUCT OF THE GRACCHI.

"O Rome! my country! city of the soul!"

The history of republican Rome, has ever been regarded and consulted as a rich reservoir of models for imitation, and examples to deter; in this respect it is, perhaps, unrivalled, certainly unsurpassed. Exhibiting all that is admirable in heroism, estimable in firmness, ennobling in patriotism, and magnanimous in generosity, yet obtruding upon our notice at the same time, instances of national and individual ambition, the most daring and insatiable, and violations of common justice and common humanity, the most flagrant and outrageous, and presenting us with the picture of a state agitated and distracted by domestic feuds, popular tumult, and frequent revolutions; the Roman republic seems to have been intended as an event, where man should show what he was capable of doing, when all the energies of his soul were kindled into vivid action—when his feelings were wrought up to the highest pitch of excitation, by momentous situations, inciting circumstances, sudden incidents, and the happening of unexpected contingencies—when, in short, there should be a violent pressure, or a continued action, upon some of the most powerful impulses which exercise their sway over him.

That this state of things was almost exclusively the effect of the peculiar form of government, few, I expect, will deny; and I think the factions and dissentions which so often raged within the republic, which more than once prostrated its liberties, which threatened, and at length put a final period to its existence, may be attributed to that grand error in its policy, the division of its citizens into patricians and plebians;—this was a never failing source of contention and disagreement—a fountain that profusely dispensed its bitter waters to the high and low of the community; the plebeians striving to surmount those barriers, which shut them out from a just participation in the superintendence and management of the national affairs, and struggling after those rights, which were insultingly withheld, from pretended motives of expediency, by those haughty monopolists, who were forced to admit the validity of their claims: the patricians, on the other hand, actuated by what they thought the presumptuous attempts of their inferiors, observing with determined zeal to extend and strengthen the wall of partition, and resolved to retain, at all hazards, their beloved privileges. Some intelligent men have praised this feature of the Roman government, on the ground of its usefulness in preventing the ignorant multitude from absorbing the whole power, an object very desirable at all times, and peculiarly necessary in the absence of the representative system; but the means employed, were most poorly adapted to the end proposed; it was like the application of a medicine to a disorder of the animal constitution, which, without effecting a complete removal, sows the seeds of other distempers that rack and undermine the frame; for while the many evils necessarily flowing from the institution of a body of nobility, were introduced—the creation of a false standard of merit—the thrusting back of genius and talent from their proper sphere of exertion, and that very multitude, despised as they were, and suffering under the persecution of the patricians, enjoyed at times a dangerous degree of power; it was upon the intelligent among the plebians that the infirmities of the state reddit aegritudinem. Self democratical scheme, defined much impropriety.

The plebians have been stigmatized as turbulent, prone to insurrection, and restless contenders for mischievous innovations, but the murmur of complaint, the clamour of remonstrance, the threat of vengeance, were seldom heard without a potent cause—"ill usage may have roused their indignation, and hurried them into excesses; but the original fault was in government." The active leaders of the plebians were treated by the patricians, as men who concealed under the mask of patriotism, an eagerness for power, and a desire of dwelling in the plunder of their wealth—the conduct of some of them indeed betrayed the demagogue; but many were animated by the noblest motives; their every action spoke it: it was evinced in their honourable self-denial, their neglect of the means of personal profit and aggrandizement, their constancy in unrequited service, their generous perseverance, though destruction hovered around their path; it is often difficult and sometimes impossible to conclude, even from a rigid scrutiny of a man's actions, whether he is heated by a rash but well intentioned zeal, or by a flame kindled at the grosser fire of ambition or cupidity; their effects are often similar, and those who are injured or fancy they are injured, if they are able, do not always feel inclined to discriminate between them—when men are smarting under a blow, they are not generally in the best humour for considering its justice or the good intentions of the giver; we can never decide with certainty upon the motives of any man—some have committed the worst actions, from the purest motives, and abhor the foul actions from the vilest; we cannot read the heart—we can only form an opinion from the conduct which meets our senses; of the secret springs that lie beyond them, with the assistance of former experience, and analogous reasoning, we may often form a correct one; but our liability to err should repress the spirit of dogmatism, and induce us to be slow in condemning, where the evidence is not very strong. When a man's actions are beneficial to the public, without being personally advantage to himself, we have a powerful reason for believing that the feelings which prompt him are pure and honourable; if his conduct, instead of being personally advantageous, is absolutely detrimental, the foundation of our belief almost owns subversion; he may be actuated by a love of applause, or the expectation of future fame, but we have no right to presume it.—When there is a strong probability that success will bring with it the robe of office, or the golden reward, even then the good of the community may be the sovereign of his bosom, this may be the hope nearest his heart, and this the object which elevates him, as his mental eye pierces through the vista of futurity and beholds his menaced banner, streaming triumphantly at last over prostrate opposition.

Convinced of this, let us turn our attention for a few moments to a candid examination of the conduct of the Gracchi. No part of the history of the Roman republic can ever become "stale, flat or unprofitable."—It is studied in youth, its memory does not pass away like breath from a mirror's surface, as is often the case with the subject of perusal in after life, the waters of delightful association have its root, and would alone preserve it in freshness and in vigor—there are no two personages in the whole range of Roman biography, more worthy of attention, than Tiberius and Caius Gracchus—they have been censured, but not always in the spirit of philanthropic liberality; let us look with impartiality at the objects they pursued, together with the manner and motive of pursuit, so far as we are able to judge of them; this has been rarely done, as all who pretend to a knowledge of history, are acquainted with the leading events of the lives from Plutarch and other ancient writers. It is not worth while to enter into a detail of them, I shall therefore, in general, refer to them, without a particular narration.

Grandsons of the illustrious Scipio, and sons of a man who had been honoured with two triumphs, the young Gracchi showed themselves no degenerate descendants, they were distinguished no less for the superiority of their virtue, than for their military skill and prowess. Applauded by the people, for the additional glow which his deeds communicated to the halo of illusory valor, and respected for the almost unexampled regularity of his life, Tiberius Gracchus devoted himself to the service of the oppressed plebians, upon the theatre of legislation and judicial exertion; uniting to a powerful and cultivated intellect, an eloquence so pure and persuasive, as to obtain for him the reputation of the greatest orator of the age; a more gifted advocate but seldom lifted up his voice in their behalf. As tribune of the people, his great aim was an enforcement of the Lex Licinia—this was "the very head and front of his offending"—this called forth that storm of fierce indignation, which beat upon, and at last destroyed him; but let us see whether he did any thing more than strive to wrest from the grasp of the patricians, those lands to which they had no right. Tiberius did not seek to create a new law, but merely to enforce an existing one; the question was not, whether that law was a wise or an impolitic one, but whether it was to be broken at will by an arrogant and usurping nobility—whether surrendered, it was to be trampled upon with impunity? Tiberius thought not, and consequently urged, that those who in violation of this law, held above five hundred acres of the public lands should deliver them up, that the impoverished people—the rightful claimants, might possess them; there was nothing of the sternness of strict retribution in his requisitions,—on the contrary, his expression breathed nothing but kindness and conciliation towards offenders—the penalty was to be remitted and the principal landholders compensated for the loss of their property. He expatiated in an affecting manner, upon the wretchedness which might be traced to the relaxation of the Lex Licinia, and pointed to its enforcement, as the only adequate mode of relief: he mourned that a portion of the soil of Italy, which had once reared a race of hardy husbandmen, the very nerve and muscle of the state, should be tilled by slaves; and he looked forward with eager anticipation to the time, when it should again be trod by Roman freemen, conscious of independence, and zealous for their country's glory.—Surely there was nothing in this to justify the cry of sedition kind and long, which was raised by the Senate! If we view him merely as a sustainer of the law, without considering the good or bad effects of that law, can we find fault with him? Did he do any thing more than his duty, as Tribune? If he had rightly insisted upon the full exaction of the penalty, could offenders, in reason, have complained?—They might murmur at his severity, but how could they tax him with injustice.

When, therefore, we consider the many and gross violations of the law—the debilitating effects of those unexampled regularity of his life, Tiberius Gracchus devoted himself to the service of the oppressed plebians, upon the theatre of legislation and judicial exertion; uniting to a powerful and cultivated intellect, an eloquence so pure and persuasive, as to obtain for him the reputation of the greatest orator of the age; a more gifted advocate but seldom lifted up his voice in their behalf. As tribune of the people, his great aim was an enforcement of the Lex Licinia—this was "the very head and front of his offending"—this called forth that storm of fierce indignation, which beat upon, and at last destroyed him; but let us see whether he did any thing more than strive to wrest from the grasp of the patricians, those lands to which they had no right. Tiberius did not seek to create a new law, but merely to enforce an existing one; the question was not, whether that law was a wise or an impolitic one, but whether it was to be broken at will by an arrogant and usurping nobility—whether surrendered, it was to be trampled upon with impunity? Tiberius thought not, and consequently urged, that those who in violation of this law, held above five hundred acres of the public lands should deliver them up, that the impoverished people—the rightful claimants, might possess them; there was nothing of the sternness of strict retribution in his requisitions,—on the contrary, his expression breathed nothing but kindness and conciliation towards offenders—the penalty was to be remitted and the principal landholders compensated for the loss of their property. He expatiated in an affecting manner, upon the wretchedness which might be traced to the relaxation of the Lex Licinia, and pointed to its enforcement, as the only adequate mode of relief: he mourned that a portion of the soil of Italy, which had once reared a race of hardy husbandmen, the very nerve and muscle of the state, should be tilled by slaves; and he looked forward with eager anticipation to the time, when it should again be trod by Roman freemen, conscious of independence, and zealous for their country's glory.—Surely there was nothing in this to justify the cry of sedition kind and long, which was raised by the Senate! If we view him merely as a sustainer of the law, without considering the good or bad effects of that law, can we find fault with him? Did he do any thing more than his duty, as Tribune? If he had rightly insisted upon the full exaction of the penalty, could offenders, in reason, have complained?—They might murmur at his severity, but how could they tax him with injustice.

When, therefore, we consider the many and gross violations of the law—the debilitating effects of those Tiberius to preserve the legal union between the patricians and plebians, without however, permitting the rights of the latter to be completely swept away—must we not admit the patriotism of his motives? It may be said that his stretches of power indicated an ambitious spirit, and the fate of Octavius may be presented as an example. But I ask, did he ever overstep the bounds of official authority? Did he not pursue the only path which could lead to success? Was not his conduct to Octavius before his deposition, most generous, and was he not fully justified in striving to displace a man, who opposed the execution of a law he had himself broken, and who was the corrupt tool of a corrupt Senate? When by the death of Attalus Philopater, king of Pergamus, the Roman people became the possessors of his wealth, Tiberius proposed an edict by which that wealth should be distributed among the poorest of those citizens, who were to have a share in the public lands, that they might supply themselves with the cattle and utensils necessary for the cultivation of their little estates.—Can there be a doubt that this was the most right-ful disposition that could possibly be made of it? But the Senate who expected that their own coffers would have been the receptacles of this treasure, were outrageous. Such were the persons who arraigned his conduct—such were the characters who accused him of aiming at a diadem—such the men to the vilest impulses of whose nature he fell a sacrifice. Before Tiberius Gracchus can be accused of avarice, it must be shown that he endeavoured to enrich himself. Before he can be accused of sedition, he must have done more than propose the enforcement of the Lex Licinia; to merit the charge of sedition, he must exhibit stronger symptoms of it than are afforded by his attempts to curb the power of the venal Senate that opposed him.

We will now advert to the career of the younger brother of Tiberius. Caius Gracchus also displayed a mind of extraordinary vigour, but, although similar to Tiberius in mental capacity and exhibition, and like him renowned as a warrior, eminent as an orator, and conspicuous for his virtues, yet he differed greatly from him in many respects. This difference arose principally from the younger brother's greater measure of temperament, and higher causes of excitement. Tiberius, though firm and persevering, was cautious and prudent fully determined in his purpose, he was desirous, however, of moving with moderation, and executing with a gentle hand, the virulency and dishonest artifices of those who resisted him, occasioned an increase and severity of attack, which were not originally intended. Caius was bold and uncompromising. The eloquence of Tiberius touched the sensibilities—chaste and energetic, its simplicity of diction, and apparent artlessness of narration, gave to its deep feeling and pathos an air of unquestionable sincerity, and as it seemed to flow directly from an oppressed heart, it did not fail to make a powerful impression upon those to whom it was addressed. The eloquence of Caius stirred up the passions of his auditors, it displayed all that strength of language, vehemence of invective, and tone of exaggeration, which we might expect from a man of ardent feelings and fertile imagination, wrought up to a degree of impetuosity and preoccupation by the murder of his brother, his own injuries, and the triumph of the opposite party. His speeches were replete with glowing imagery; the figures were often terrific, and the expression always spirited; he was not sparing in the use of rhetorical embellishment, and he sought to give efficacy to what he said, by the graceful violence of his gesture, and the peculiar animation of his delivery. At the time of his brother's assassination, Caius Gracchus was one and twenty years of age—it was remarked that after that event, he absented himself from the forum, and seldom appeared in public. The Senate thought that the fear of a like fate haunted his mind, and would forever cool the fervour and paralyze the energies of his son), and they exulted at the idea. But it was not long before they discovered how greatly they had been mistaken. Emerging from the shades of retirement, which he had only sought for the purpose of preparing himself for the warfare in which his brother fell, by an improvement of his mental and oratorial powers: he took the field, and presented to their astonished gaze, the most formidable adversary who had yet sounded the trumpet of defiance. I have not time to enter into an examination of the different acts of his tribuneship; I am afraid I have been already too tedious; but I will briefly notice the principal charges which have been brought against him. He has been accused of aiming at the destruction of the Senatorial power; he made an edict, by which the magistrate who banished a Roman citizen without observing the legal formalities should be accountable in the assembly of the people; he made another, by which the Latins were admitted within the pale of citizenship—he proposed a law by which the domestic tribunals were to be filled by a magistracy selected from the knights, instead of the Senate—he supported the Lex Frumentia. The first edict bears its own recommendation—the second needs no vindication, the Latins were entitled to it, and their patriotism was kindled by it—the law which gave the magistracy to the knights abridged indeed the power of the Senate; but did not the former corruption of the magistracy, the gross pollution of the courts of justice, render such a law prudent and praiseworthy? We have previously considered the Lex Licinia, and if Tiberius Gracchus was justified in enforcing it, Caius was. If Caius Gracchus had gone further, and done all he possibly could to cut down the power of the Senate, could we blame him? Could we mourn the fall of such a Senate? He has been accused of courting the people—he relieved their wants—he lowered the price of grain, that the poor might receive sustenance—he built public granaries for the prevention of want, in years of scarcity—he projected roads, and other public works of vast utility, which gave occupation to many—he planned and commenced the rebuilding of Carthage. Can no motive be discovered for such exertions but a desire of popular favour? He tore down the scaffolding of the grandees, that the people might behold the public games; but he sent back the produce of a sale of the corn which had been presented to them, that those from whom it had been unjustly wrested might experience no loss. As we have premised, we have no right to presume the existence of a sinister intention, when the actions are beneficial. He has been accused of ambition, and a spirit of revenge. Did he take any illegal measures to invest himself with power? Was there any thing in the career of his brother so encouraging to an aspiring mind? Where is the evidence of his ambition or desire of self-aggrandizement? It is said that he was stimulated by a desire of revenging his brother's death. If by this is meant, a desire of punishing its authors, there was nothing so highly reprehensible in it. But I can see no grounds for a belief that this formed any part of his motives to action—he speaks to the purport of the treatment of his brother, as an exemplification of the feelings and character of their noble antagonists; his schemes have nothing narrow, nothing selfish in them; the great body of the people are the objects of his solicitude. As to the attempt of his enemies to raise a suspicion of his having been privy to the death of Scipio, the son of Paulus Emilius, it is beneath notice. The circumstances relied upon it, destroy it, the foundation expels the superstructure which they attempt to rear. To suspect that he could show any peculiar activity to bring to punishment the authors of his death, whereas, what is by no means indisputable, that he was assassinated, was by no means reasonable. Let us remember how this people acted towards Tiberius Gracchus, and then reflect whether it is natural to suppose, that Caius Gracchus would lament his departure. I would extend the observations a great deal further, but I do not wish to weary my readers. I hope these remarks may induce them to examine with candour, the conduct of those who have been hastily condemned—to allow them their proper place in the temple of posthumous fame—to bind that wreath upon the bust which should have adorned their living brow. The confident hope that posterity would vindicate their actions, and cherish their memory with respect, has cheered the worthy in the darkest night of their depression. Let not this expectation be but an unsubstantial creation of the fancy. The best interests of mankind forbid it. By doing justice to the illustrious dead, we inspirit the living—they inhale the incense of praise which rises at the shrine of departed greatness, it causes the eye of young genius to brighten, and his heart to overflow with gladness; it nourishes the generous shoots of emulation; it opens the fair fit scenes of promise, into the unwithering fruit of excellence. A contemplation of the career of exalted virtue, though struggling and suffering, invigorates our moral resolutions. We behold the immortal mind calm, unruffled, lifted above the rage, beyond the influence of earthly contention, triumphing over the pains and wants and weaknesses of the mortal body. We admire, we venerate, we love, that internal sunshine, which the

But where can a valetudinarian on his pony safely take his pastime on a murderous 1st of September? I could not ride through the fields without spoiling sport for the others, nor through hedge-row lanes, without danger of getting a random shot myself; so the high road became my only resource, and a very sad one it is, as every lover of shade, and hater of dust, can testify.

One advantage, however, it had over more privileged haunts: it held out hopes of a companion; and, strange to say, though long habit has made solitude, in every other form, not only tolerable, but delightful, I never could bear riding alone. The man who gallops in pursuit of pleasure or of business, can afford to do so; he has excitement within to spur him on, and grudges even the casual encounter with a less rapid traveller. But he who, with nerves unstrung, and limbs enfeebled, finds himself restrained within the precincts of an amble, with no stimulus save duty, and no object save health, (if health his negative state of existence can be called,) is much indebted to the brother pilgrim who beguiles with social chat the tedium of the way.

Last Saturday was just such a cloudless, windless, faultless, monotonous sort of day as the 1st of September, as it affects the happiness of thousands of his Majesty's subjects, ought to be; such a day as disposed Dumplo to fall asleep on his legs, and as would have me infallibly follow his example, but for the incessant popping, (resembling in more ways than one a regiment at field practice,) which was kept up all around me; and but for my rencounter about a mile from home with the worthy minister of the parish, just returned from a six weeks' tour, of very unwonted recreation, in a distant part of the country.

Our meeting was a very joyful and cordial one; for among the many who, in our privileged land, feed with no hireling measure of zeal and tenderness the flocks whom they love as their own soul, Mr. Menteith ever shone conspicuous. I never saw simplicity in lovelier union with energy than in his pure and primitive character. The innocence of the dove was in all his own intercourse with the world; the wisdom and vigilance of the serpent he kept for the concerns of his parishioners, to whom his word was law, and his counsel the voice of inspiration. He preached nothing that he did not practice, as far as consistent endeavours and higher aid can carry frail mortality. If this standard of virtue seemed awful in the pulpit, his example made it every where else easy and alluring. He taught his people "how to abound," by sharing his scanty stipend with all who needed it; and "how to suffer loss," by burying four promising children with the sorrow that is akin to hope.

His mind, imbued with all the higher elements of poetry and romance, would have soared often "beyond this visible diurnal sphere," had it not been retained in its humble but more useful orbit by the practical good sense of his twenty years' helpmate, and the practical duties of his beloved vocation. The latent fire of imagination, tempered as it was by judgment, and sobered by experience, would, however, sometimes break forth; and when, in the very spirit of him who was caught up into the third heaven, Menteith sought to draw his hearers thither, fancy lent him imagery whose front was evidently not of this world. He spoke of a better world with the familiarity of a denizen, and the longings of an absentee; with all the feelings, in short, of a sojourner, but neither an unwilling nor impatient one, among the passing scenes of earth. In these, indeed, few found such vivid, because few such unalloyed, enjoyment. He never expected from them what they could not yield; he never sought for his soul's nurture in the fading flowers of time; but tempered with their perishable produce a fleeting edifice of earthly comfort, which he might store at leisure with the incorruptible manna of the skies. No man was more easily amused—"pleased with a feather, tickled with a straw." And why?—just because he knew and felt them to be straws and feathers all the while. In short, with old and young, with grave and gay, with saint and sinner, Mr. Menteith was an unwearied favourite. His worth was so genuine, his piety so unaffected, his cheerfulness so contagious, and his gravity so interesting, that I never saw him enter a room without a cordial welcome, or leave it without a sincere regret.

His bland and delightful smile, at all times peculiarly winning, struck me on our present meeting as unusually irresistible: his pale serene countenance was enlivened with the excitement of travel, and the joy of return. "It was really worth while," he said, "to leave you all, that I might know the happiness of coming home. Mary, they say was like a creature demented when I was away, and I am sure she is little better yet.—She sets both elbow-chairs for me instead of one, and sugars my tea twice, out of very exuberance of affection. The children are quite as light-headed as their mother. Johnny brings me his fractions, and asks me how I think he goes on in his Greek; and as for little Jessie, (she has marked her sampler all over with three P's for pans,) she came to let me hear her new hymn with such a broad grin on her face, that I was obliged to give her a kiss, and stop her psalmody till a fitter season."

"And the crops, Mr. Francis," continued he, "did you ever see such abundance on the face of the earth?—a kind compensation, truly, for the drought and scarcity of last year. I asked Mary how she managed to get my harvest down so cleverly; for, though an excellent housewife, she has little skill in husbandry. 'Goodman,' said she, (and the tear filled her eye as she told it me,) 'your corn was no sooner ripe than there came more shearers to your harvest-rig than would have cut down half the parish. They came unbidden and unfed. They cut your corn with songs and shouts of joy; and when I forced upon them the ale, they would hardly accept; they drank your health and happy return, till I could scarce find voice to thank them. John Wilson, the ploughman, has dressed your turnips, and a' the lasses in the parish hoed your potatoes, and as for fish, Watty Garthtine said if the Provost o' Edinburgh should want haddies, the Manse should aye be weel supplied.' 'Is it not a blessed thing, Mr. Francis,' asked the worthy minister, kindling as he spoke, 'to have one's poor services thus appreciated, and to return thus among one's own people?'

"It is more blessed to give than to receive," answered I, in his own strain; "and, repay us they may, these good folks must ever remain your debtors."

This, however sincerely and quietly spoken, was enough to bring a blush over his modest countenance. "I am just about," said he, "requiting the courtesy of my friends of all ranks, in the coin they like best, viz. a round

But I ask, did he ever overstep the bounds of official authority? Did he not pursue the only path which could lead to success? Was not his conduct to Octavius before his deposition, most generous, and was he not fully justified in striving to displace a man, who opposed the execution of a law he had himself broken, and who was the corrupt tool of a corrupt Senate? When by the death of Attalus Philopater, king of Pergamus, the Roman people became the possessors of his wealth, Tiberius proposed an edict by which that wealth should be distributed among the poorest of those citizens, who were to have a share in the public lands, that they might supply themselves with the cattle and utensils necessary for the cultivation of their little estates.—Can there be a doubt that this was the most right-ful disposition that could possibly be made of it? But the Senate who expected that their own coffers would have been the receptacles of this treasure, were outrageous. Such were the persons who arraigned his conduct—such were the characters who accused him of aiming at a diadem—such the men to the vilest impulses of whose nature he fell a sacrifice. Before Tiberius Gracchus can be accused of avarice, it must be shown that he endeavoured to enrich himself. Before he can be accused of sedition, he must have done more than propose the enforcement of the Lex Licinia; to merit the charge of sedition, he must exhibit stronger symptoms of it than are afforded by his attempts to curb the power of the venal Senate that opposed him.

We will now advert to the career of the younger brother of Tiberius. Caius Gracchus also displayed a mind of extraordinary vigour, but, although similar to Tiberius in mental capacity and exhibition, and like him renowned as a warrior, eminent as an orator, and conspicuous for his virtues, yet he differed greatly from him in many respects. This difference arose principally from the younger brother's greater measure of temperament, and higher causes of excitement. Tiberius, though firm and persevering, was cautious and prudent fully determined in his purpose, he was desirous, however, of moving with moderation, and executing with a gentle hand, the virulency and dishonest artifices of those who resisted him, occasioned an increase and severity of attack, which were not originally intended. Caius was bold and uncompromising. The eloquence of Tiberius touched the sensibilities—chaste and energetic, its simplicity of diction, and apparent artlessness of narration, gave to its deep feeling and pathos an air of unquestionable sincerity, and as it seemed to flow directly from an oppressed heart, it did not fail to make a powerful impression upon those to whom it was addressed. The eloquence of Caius stirred up the passions of his auditors, it displayed all that strength of language, vehemence of invective, and tone of exaggeration, which we might expect from a man of ardent feelings and fertile imagination, wrought up to a degree of impetuosity and preoccupation by the murder of his brother, his own injuries, and the triumph of the opposite party. His speeches were replete with glowing imagery; the figures were often terrific, and the expression always spirited; he was not sparing in the use of rhetorical embellishment, and he sought to give efficacy to what he said, by the graceful violence of his gesture, and the peculiar animation of his delivery. At the time of his brother's assassination, Caius Gracchus was one and twenty years of age—it was remarked that after that event, he absented himself from the forum, and seldom appeared in public. The Senate thought that the fear of a like fate haunted his mind, and would forever cool the fervour and paralyze the energies of his son), and they exulted at the idea. But it was not long before they discovered how greatly they had been mistaken. Emerging from the

of friendly visits; and as far as our roads lie together, you will, perhaps, go with me. You are a bad visiter, I know, Mr. Francis, but most of all my calls will be where calls are unknown, and etiquette dispensed with."

I am, indeed, a bad visiter, which, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, means no visiter at all; but I owned the temptation of seeing my worthy friend's reception, and the hope of coming in for a share at least of the cordial welcome he was sure to call forth, overcame any scruples; especially as in cottages and farm steadings there is generally something to be learned even during a morning call; some trait of unsophisticated nature to be studied, or some sturdy lesson of practical wisdom to be treasured for future use.

We had not ridden far, when my companion, turning up a pretty rough road, leading to a large farm-house on the right, said, with an arch smile, "I love what our superstitious forefathers would esteem a lucky beginning even to a morning's ride, and am glad our commences with a wedding visit. Peter Bandster has taken a wife to my absence, and I must go and call him to account, for unfriending me at the play. Have you heard any thing, Mr. Francis, about the bride?"

More than I could wish, thanked I to myself; for my old dilemma, the indecorous discomfort to my lack of hospitality by assiduous interrogation of all marriages, christenings, and gossippings abroad, had deaved me for the last three weeks with philippics about its unlucky wedding. The folly of Peter in marrying above his own line; the ignorance of the bride, who scarce knew tint yarn from tow, or beer from barley; her unpardonable accomplishments of netting purses, and playing on the spinnet; above all, her plated candlesticks, flounced gown and fashionable bonnet; and furnished Hannah with inexhaustible matter for that exercise of the tongue which the Scots call "rhyming," and the English, "ringing the changes;" to which, as to all other noises, custom can alone render one insensible.

I had no mind to damp the minister's benevolent feelings towards the couple, and contented myself with answering, that I heard the bride was both bonnie and braw. The good man shook his head. "We have an old proverb, and a true one," said he—"a bonnie bride is sune buskit; but I have known gawdy butterflies cast their painted slugs, and become housewives in the end."

"But there stands Peter—no very blithe bridegroom methinks!" said I, as my eye rested on the tall and usually jolly young farmer, musing disconsolately in his cattle-yard over what appeared to be the body of a dead cow. He started on seeing the minister, as if ashamed of his sorrow or its cause, and came forward to meet us, struggling to adopt his countenance a little better to his circumstances. "Well, Peter!" said the minister, frankly extending his hand, "and so I am to wish you joy! I thought when I gave you your name five and twenty years ago, if it pleased God to spare me, to have given you your helpmate also; but what signifies it by whom the knot is tied, if you truly love, and the blessing of God go with it? Nay, never hang your head, Peter; but tell me, before we beat up the young gude wife's quarters, what you were leaning over so wae-like when we rode forward."

"Odd, sir!" cried Peter, reddening up, "it wasna the value o' the beast, though she was the best cow in my mother's byre, but the way I lost her, that put me a wee out o' tune. My Jessie, (for I maunna ca' her gude-wife, it seems, nor mistress neither,) is an ill guide o' kye, ay, and what's waur, o' lasses. We had a tea-drinking last night, nae doubt, as new-married folk should; and what for no?—I'se warrant my mither had them too in daft days. But she didna keep the house asteer the haill night wi' fiddles and dancin', and it neither new-year nor handsel-Monday, nor she didna lie in her bed till aught or nine o'clock, as my Jess does, na, nor yet——"

"But what has all this to do with the loss of your cow, Peter?"

"Ower muckle, sir, ower muckle. The lasses and lads likeit reels as well as their mistress, and whisky a battle better. They a' sleepit in, and myself among the lave. Nae mortal ever lookit the airt that puir Blue Bell was in, and her at the very calving; and this morning when the byre-door was opened, she was lying stiff and stark, wi' a dead calf beside her. It's no the cow, sir, (though it was but the last market I had the offer o' fifteen pund for her,) it's the thought that she was nae mair forwarded among me, and my Jess, and her tawpies o' lasses."

"Come, come, Peter," said the good minister, "you seem to have been as much to blame as the rest; and as for your young bride, she must creep, as the auld wives say, before she can gang. Country thrift can no more be learnt in a day than town breeding, and if that your wife, they say, has her share."

"Ower muckle may be," was the half-muttered reply, as he marshalled us into the house. The best end of the old-fashioned farm house, which during the primitive sway of Peter's mother, had exhibited the usual decorations of an aumrie, a clock, and a pair of press-beds, with a clean swept ingle, and carefully sanded floor, had undergone a metamorphosis not less violent than some of Ovid's or Harlequin's. The aumrie had given place to a satin wood work table, the clock to a mirror, and the press-beds, (whose removal no one could regret,) to that object of Hannah's direst vituperations, the piano forte, while the fire-place revelled in all the summer luxury of elaborately twisted shavings, and the once sanded floor, was covered with an already soiled and faded carpet, to whose delicate colours, Peter, fresh from the clay furrows, and his two sheep-dogs dripping from the sheep pond, had nearly proved equally fatal.

In this sanctum sanctorum sat the really pretty bride, in all the dignity of outraged feeling which ignorance of life and a lavish perusal of romances could inspire, on witnessing the first cloud on her usually good natured husband's brow. She hastily cleared up her ruffled looks, gave the minister a cordial, though somewhat affected welcome, and dropped me a curtsy which twenty years' rustication enabled me very inadequately to return.

The good pastor bent on this new lamb of his fold a benignant yet searching glance, and seemed watching where, amid the fluent small talk which succeeded, he might edge in a word of playful yet serious import to the happiness of the youthful pair. The bride was stretching forth her hand with all the dignity of her new station, to ring the bell for cake and wine, when Peter, (whose spleen was evidently waiting for a vent,) hastily starting up, cried out, "Mistress! if ye're ower grand to serve the minister yourself, there's one 'll be proud to do't. There shall nae quean fill a glass for him in this house while it ca's me master. My mither wad hae served him on her bended knees, gin he wad hae let her; and ye think it ower muckle to bring her the bread to him! Oh, Jess, Jess! to Hamaa awa' wi' your town ways and town airs!"

The bride coloured and pouted; but there gathered a large drop in her eye, and the pastor hailed it as an earnest of future concession. He took her hand kindly, and put it into Peter's not reluctant one—"Spring showers make May flowers," my dear lassie, says the old proverb, and I treat but o' these little clouds will spring future happiness. You, Jessie, have chosen an honest, worthy, kind hearted country husband, whose love will be well worth the sacrifice of a few super-

---

THE IMAGE IN LAVA.

BY MRS. HEMANS.

The impression of a woman's form, with an infant strained to her breast, found at the first excavations of Pompeii.

Thou thing of years departed!
What ages have gone by,
Since love the mould did cast was set
By Lave and Agony!

Temple and tower have mouldered,
Empires from Earth have passed—
And woman's heart hath held a trace
Those glories to outlast!

And clinging to thy fragile image
Thus fearfully outlaced,
Survives the proud memorials rear'd
By conquerors of mankind!

Babe! wert thou calmly slumbering
Upon thy mother's breast,
When suddenly the fiery tomb
Shut round each gentle guest?

A strange dark fate o'ertook you,
Fair babe and loving heart!
One moment of a thousand pangs—
Yet better than to part!

Happily of that fond bosom
Ou ashes here impress'd
Thou art the only treasure, child!
Wherein a hope might rest

Perchance all vainly lavish'd
Its other love had been,
And where it trusted, nought remain'd
But thorns wherewith to lean!

For better than to perish,
Thy form within its clasp,
Then live and lose thee, precious one!
From that impassioned grasp!

Oh! I could pass all cities
Left by the pomp of old,
To gaze on this rude monument,
Call'd in Affection's mould!

Love, human Love! what art thou?
—The print upon the dust
Outlives the cities of renown,
Wherein the mighty trust!

Immortal, oh! Immortal,
Thou art, whose earthly glow
Hath given these ashes holiness—
It must, it must be so!

COMMUNICATION.

INFANT SCHOOL.

It may be confidently asserted that Philadelphia, numerous as are its benevolent and charitable institutions, exhibits none of superior interest to the Infant School, in Chesnut street, established under the auspices and patronage of a number of benevolent ladies. It is impossible, without sentiments of high approbation, to behold 150 children, of various ages, from two to six years, assembled in an orderly and regular manner, and nearly the whole decently and comfortably clad, leaving the simple rudiments of a plain education, preparatory to their admission into Public Schools. What they learn, however, is but a secondary object. The main objects are to guard them from the contamination necessarily resulting from prowling the streets, as would be otherwise the case with most of them—and to free their parents from care and anxiety respecting them during that portion of the day spent under the superintendence of this excellent institution. For the preservation of their health, a due proportion of their time is devoted to play and exercise in a large commodious yard, where suitable means of diversion are provided. The ladies of Philadelphia, generally, are earnestly invited to visit this School, which cannot fail to afford them the highest gratification, and to enlist them among its supporters. As no more children can be accommodated than the present number, other schools will be found necessary in different parts of the city.

THE EVENING POST.

OFFICE No. 112 CHESNUT STREET.

$2 PER ANNUM—in advance.

All subscriptions if not paid within the year, will be charged $3—and $4 if not in months.

LITERARY.

Carey's Letters are now for sale at Carey, Lea & Carey's. It is reasonable to expect from the present demand, that the whole of the copies of this work will soon be bought up.

The Atlantic Souvenir, by Messrs. Carey, Lea & Carey, has appeared. It is splendidly embellished, and its contents are superior in point of interest and value to any of the preceding volumes.

The second volume of the splendid work on American Ornithology, by the Prince of Musignano (Charles Bonaparte) is nearly completed, and will be published early in the next year, by Messrs. Carey, Lea & Carey. All the plates for the third volume are in progress, and several of them are already engraved.

A new novel is to be published in a few weeks by Mr. Littell, entitled "Nothing by Nobody."

Two volumes from the pen of Sir W. Scott, were to appear in October; and another in November.—The Highland Widow, the Two Drovers, and the Surgeon's Daughter, are the tales of the former, and the "Tales of a Grandfather," of the latter.

Mr. Percival has published "Clio. No. III," which is characterized as "another volume of gems put forth by one of the sweetest of the American poets."

A weekly paper is to be published in New York, entitled "Le Courier des Etats Unis," and the New York Courier speaks in high terms of the gentlemen who are to conduct it.

Miss Frances Wright, the authoress, has arrived at Paris, whither she has gone on her way to Italy, where she purposes to pass the winter, in order to re-establish her health, which has been declining for some time past. The Harmony Gazette says. "She is expected to return to her residence at Washoba, in the course of the ensuing summer."

Mr. Grigg, in north Fourth street, has in press, and will shortly publish, a fourth edition of Dr. M'Henry's interesting poems, entitled "The Pleasures of Friendship." It is the intention of the publisher to issue it in a very splendid style—calculated for a Christmas and New Year's offering.

The official record of the Board of Guardians of the City of Philadelphia for the last year, gives the following statement of the sum collected for their support:—

For the support and employment of the Poor, for the year ending 23d May, 1827, a levy was made as follows, viz:—
For the city,	$31,293 06
For the District of Southwark,	5,029 18
For the Northern Liberties and Kensington,	15,650 22
For Penn Township,	6,386 81
Total,	$50,961 27

The Rector, church wardens and vestry of the Episcopal united churches in this city, at a late meeting, expressed their sympathise with the sufferings and trouble of the late Bishop Kemp, with the diocese of Maryland, and with the church clergy, in the adverse dispensation of Higher Providence, which has deprived them all non found, whose piety, virtues and talents will long be remembered," and that "in testimony of their respect for the cherished memory of Bishop Kemp, the members of the vestry will wear crape on the left arm for thirty days."

NEW JERSEY.

This State is making a rong efforts to keep pace with her neighboring States in the great work of internal improvement. The Legislature, which is now in session, is considering the project of a canal from the Delaware to New York Harbor. An applicat on has been made for leave to open a canal from Newark Bay to New York Bay. And a company has been formed for making a rail way between Elizabeth Point and Easton.

Captain Dickerson, of the ship Prudence, at New York, in 45 days from Pernambuco, reports "that the whole coast of Brazil continues to be completely lined with Buenos Ayres Privateers. One off Bahia, alone captured 16 vessels in 3 days, the principal part of which, with valuable cargoes on board, were manned and sent to the River La Plata. It was stated that this same Privateer had on board in silver, two hundred thousand milreas, prize money. It was also stated at Rio, that some further negociations for peace were going on, through the British Minister at Buenos Ayres, but there was nothing known to form a judgment upon."

In some parts of North Carolina, pear and cherry trees were in bloom last month, for the second time. The Warrenton (N. C.) Reporter says:—We are informed by good authority, that there is now within two miles of this village, a Pear tree which has yielded once, this season, a quantity of good fruit—is again bearing a second growth, nearly half matured, and is also in full bloom for the third time. There are several trees in this place, which now exhibit fruit the second time this season, and others that are again in bloom—but the above is the only instance we have heard of, where a second growth has been borne, and the same tree again in bloom."

The third Report of the American Sunday School Union, read at the annual meeting of the Society in Philadelphia, on the 22d of May, states, that in the year which terminates with this Anniversary, the American Sunday School Union have published, 11,000 Tracts, 1,000 sheets of Hymns in sheets, 3,000 Teacher's Manual, 6,500 Select Scripture Lessons, 10,000 Alphabetical Cards, 2,500 Class Books, 2,000 Bible Questions, 484,000 Premium Books, 2,000 Teacher's Guide, 4,000 Testaments, 2,000 Teacher's Hymn Books, 23,000 Sunday School Magazines, 2,000 Reference Testaments, 2,500 Reports, 11,500 Desirables, 606,000 Tickets, 17,000 Primers, 4,000 Catalogues, 10,000 Spelling Books, 2,250 Regulations, 43,000 Catechisms, 35,000 Hymn Books, and 282,250 other publications making 1,616,756 publications, which, added to those issued by the Society, in the two preceding years, make a grand total of 3,741,849.

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE.

The Managers of this institution have made their Fifteenth Quarterly Report. They speak favourably of the beneficial effects of the annual exhibitions. The late one furnished many new articles, together with striking evidence of improvement in quality and form, in the kinds heretofore furnished. Nearly six thousand persons attended the exhibition. The drawing school and lectures will be continued the ensuing season. Females are to be admitted to the latter, as is the practice in London, Glasgow, and other places abroad, where it has been attended with beneficial consequences.

The Cattle Shows, in all parts of the country, appear to have been numerously attended this season, and, in the Eastern States, especially, to have exhibited highly approved samples of improved culture. At the great Exhibition at Worcester, in Massachusetts, on the 10th ult. the Exhibition, with the ploughing match, were not suffered to be interrupted, and scarcely to be slackened, by a deluge of rain.

On the 24th ult. the landing of William Penn, was commemorated for the 145th time in the city of Philadelphia. An address was delivered by J. N. Barker, Esq. in the Hall of the Franklin Institute, before a numerous assembly of citizens and strangers. At the dinner, Judge Peters was in the chair, and the Vice-Presidents were Messrs. Watson (the Mayor) and Morris. Among the guests were several distinguished strangers. The toasts were appropriate to the occasion. Some original letters of Penn were read, and an ode (by Dr. Coates) recited by Mr. Duponceau. The mast of Mr. Salazar (the Colombian minister) in return, for the proposal of his health is very neat.

Mr. Salazar, the Colombian Minister, returned thanks. "In return," he said "for the honorable mention of Colombia, the expression of your liberal feelings to a Sister Republic, allow me to propose the following toast.

Philadelphia—The beautiful city of Penn's humanity, and Franklin's philosophy; founded by justice, prospering by industry, and happy by virtue."

So is the following by the U. S. Attorney, General Wirt.

William Penn and his fair daughter Pennsylvania; He, the Great Patriarch, and She, the beautiful and successful Patroness of the Arts of Peace."

It will be recollected that a Mr. Clark, of Virginia, recovered from the corporation of the city of Washington, the amount of his prize, of about $100,000, drawn in a lottery for the benefit of that city, the agent of which did not fulfil his contract, either with the managers of the lottery, or the purchasers of the tickets. Suits have since been brought against the corporation, for prizes drawn by parts of tickets, not signed by the managers. The Circuit Court of the United States, has decided that the managers are not bound by the signature of the agent, and consequently the corporation is not holden for the payment of the prizes.

By an investigation made at Gomes, Orleans county, New York, it appears pretty conclusively, from the testimony of the wife, son and friend of Monroe, that the man found in the Niagara who was declared by a jury and by Mrs. Morgan to be the famous William Morgan, is Timothy Monroe of Canada. The clothes were positively identified in the most minute manner. Monroe was actually drowned in the Niagara the latter part of September, and certain marks on the body found were also identified.

Mr. Mowry, canal commissioner, has contracted for the whole eastern section of the Pennsylvania canal for one third less than the estimate of the engineer. General Lacock is progressing rapidly and with economy on the western section, and Mr. Clark exceeds the public expectation on the Juniata section.

Consumption.—An eminent physician in Vermont says—"that from personal knowledge nineteen out of twenty cases of consumption in females originate in tight lacing." None of our fair readers believe it says the Hollows Falls paper.—You might as well attempt to put the tail of a live eel into curling papier, as to make them credit it.

Intelligence from St. Louis states, that the late expedition, to quell the rising Indian hostilities, has been exceedingly fortunate and satisfactory, affording proof of great promptitude on the part of General Atkinson, and of efficiency on the part of the troops, whose station at Jefferson Barracks seems to be admirably adapted for enabling detachments to be rapidly moved to any point of disturbance on the frontier. The General succeeded in obtaining a surrender of all the principal offenders of the Winnebagoes engaged in the recent outrages about, both at Prairie du Chien, and in the attack on the keel-boats returning from Fort Snelling, as well as a security to the persons and operations of the people of the Mississippi District on Fever river, and peace and tranquility to our frontier inhabitants. Four companies were drawn from fort Snelling, to garrison Fort Crawford, and the post was put under the command of Major Fowle, provisioned for twelve months, and supplied with ordnance, ordnance stores and ammunition. All the prisoners were sent to Fort Crawford, to await their trials; some of whom no doubt will be hung. A woman and boy belonging to the murdered family, who made their escape while the Indians were killing the men, know the murderers by name, and will appear as witnesses against them. One of the Indians also was to be delivered up, and himself after he was taken, and another was taken in his place. The remainder of our troops returned to camp near Jefferson Barracks, where they still live in tents, their quarters not being finished.

An action was recently brought in England by the driver of a Van, against a Doctor Taylor. Meacher had fallen from his Van, and broken his leg, and had placed himself under the care of Taylor, by whose mismanagement he had partly lost the use of his leg. Mr. Baron Bulluck charged the jury, who returned the following verdict: "We find a verdict for the plaintiff, damage 50 pounds, on the ground of want of attention."

Mr. L. Fiske, the celebrated fancy goods worker, from London, has arrived in New York, and intends making a display of his articles.

A young man named Everet I. Terwilger, employed in the distillery of Dr. Jacob Wurts, at New Paltz, New York, rose a few nights ago, it is thought, in a dream, and stumbled into the reservoir of high wines. He succeeded in getting out of it, and then immediately went to the fire to dry his clothes. The liquor running down from his trowsers, became speedily ignited, and his person was at once in a blaze. The poor fellow suffered exceedingly, and expired at the end of 48 hours.

It is stated in a Salem paper that a strange fish was captured on the 15th of September in Schoodic river, a little above Lubec. It is said to be twenty-three feet in length, and sixteen feet round at the largest part of its body. A short mane encircled its neck, composed of stiff sharp pointed bristles, about four inches long, resembling polished wire. The creature was harpooned and shot with forty muskets balls before it was dead. Eight barrels of oil were taken from its liver, and its skin was stuffed for public exhibition.

Lieutenant Ackerly of the British ship Ocean, has effected an invention termed Self-acting safety rods, whereby the lives of persons exposed to drowning from the upsetting of boats may be preserved, and boats which are upset may be righted. The invention appears to be particularly applicable to ferry boats, from its extreme simplicity, and consequent cheapness, the fitting not exceeding six shillings. On the occasion of the Lord High Admiral's recent visit to Plymouth, he inspected Lieutenant Ackerly's invention, and expressed himself gratified at its ingenuity; a waterman's boat was upset in his royal highness's presence, and the result showed that the self-acting principle of the metallic rods was efficient in supporting five men breast high out of the water, and preserving their equilibrium in a rolling sea.

The gallant editor of the Providence American, concludes an essay upon the best mode of conveying a Lady's Hand Box, by directing that the sine qua non of a family journey be suspended under the gig or carriage, during the ride, with such straps, braces and counter braces, as shall keep it up and prevent it from oscillating, in which way he promises that no evil can befall that "useful receptacle of Ladies, not to be tumbled-personal-decorations."

Baldwin & Forbes and Davis & Brooks, of New York, have established a regular monthly line of packets, to sail always "positively advertised," from New York for Gibraltar, and from Gibraltar for New York. The packet brig Bogota, Shedden, the first of the line, is advertised in the New York papers to sail the 20th of this month for Gibraltar. The vessels are to be of the first class and always commanded by strangers. The accommodation of passengers "This line, says the New York Gazette, will afford great facilities to those who, apart from business may be disposed to visit the most delightful portion of Europe, either for health or pleasure. A person may now leave New York for Gibraltar, spend a month visiting Cadiz, Seville, Granada, with its moorish ruins, Malaga surrounded by its extensive and famed vineyards, and enjoy scenes and a climate unequalled on earth, and return home within the space of three months. No voyage across the Atlantic is made with more comfort and interest to passengers than that to the Mediterranean; the track being in a moderate and temperate latitude, and leading through the group of Western Islands, or Azores, Madeira, and others."

On the 4th of September last, as Miss Winney Caller, residing in the vicinity of Washington Court House, Alabama, was on her way to her uncle's, about one and a half miles distant from her mother's residence, she was met by a runaway negro fellow, taken from her horse, carried a short distance from the road, and there inhumanly murdered by him. The negro was, a few days after, apprehended on suspicion, and has confessed the crime. Miss Caller was about 15 years of age, and has left a mother and brother to lament her untimely fate.

MANGANESE.

The quantity of this article found in the State of Vermont, is very great. It is a surprising fact, that neither the miners nor smelters in a great many cases know what the article was. It has been discovered in abundance, and can be obtained as cheap as pig iron. We understand that a large contract has been made, to purchase it at about thirty dollars per ton. It is a very valuable article for bleaching.

The United States' Ship Hornet, Alexander Claxton, Esqr. Commander, arrived at Pensacola on the 11th ult. in 15 days from Tampico; all in excellent health; only one man on the sick list; a slight case of catarrh. Since the Hornet left that port she has been twice to Vera Cruz and twice to Tampico.

Five counterfeiters were apprehended near the town of Kingston, Tenn. and between 150 and 200 dollars of 50 and 25 cents on the bank of the state of Tennessee found on them. They have been convicted and sentenced to receive 20 lashes each on their bare backs, be imprisoned 12 months, and pay a fine of 49 Dollars. This sentence was suspended by an appeal to the Supreme Court.

It has been calculated that, since the announcement of war, Brazil has lost thirty-one vessels of war, and two hundred and thirty-three merchantmen, without counting the prizes made by the privateers armed in the United States. The republic has lost three vessels of war, three gun boats, one privateer, and three or four sloops laden with wood.

A mining company in the neighborhood of Halifax have made some valuable discoveries, and among the rest, a rich lead mine, the ore of which contains a considerable per centage of silver. By means of the extensive lead and iron mines that lie contiguous to each other, the manufacture of that metal will be commenced immediately on a large scale.

Uncertainty of the law.—From a decision of Mr. Justice Park at the Maidstone Assizes (England) it appears that a tenant at will, occupying land from a person holding it by lease becomes liable, whether he knows any thing of the lease or not, to whatever conditions it may contain.

Letters received in New-Orleans, from Mexico, states that the Legislature of the state of Gaudalaxary, lately passed a law banishing every person born in Spain, and hindering the carrying away of any property or money exceeding five hundred dollars in amount. This measure had caused great alarm and distress to many of the inhabitants of that state.

The following singular advertisement is extracted from the New Orleans Daily Advertiser of the 11th of October.

Great Phenomenon.—This great curiosity will be shown next Sunday, and every day successively, from 9 A. M. till 1 P. M and from 3 P. M. till sunset, in St. Peter street, between Royal and Chartres streets. This extraordinary woman is a black, and walks on all fours, and possesses all the agility of a monkey in climbing. She converses freely in creole French, and is about 18 years of age. Her lower limbs are like those of the Ourang-outang. Amittance $1—a ticket with his family half price.

Lebanon, Penn. Oct. 20.—A surgical operation was performed yesterday on a highly respectable gentleman of ours, Mr. John Ulsh, by Dr. George M'Clellan, the distinguished professor of surgery of Jefferson College, in Philadelphia, in presence of Drs. Ghloinger, Leisenring, Bower, Mish, Marshall, Borghaus and Selmeck. Between five and six inches of two carious ribs were safely removed to the great relief of the patient. The Professor performed two or three lesser operations during his stay, which was too short to enable his friends in this place to manifest in a suitable manner their great respect for his character and admiration of his talents.

The National Reader has been published by John Pierpont, Boston. Mr. Pierpont is advantageously known to the literary public as the author of the "Airs of Palestine," a poem of much taste and delicacy. The present work is designed for the use of schools. It is said to be a judicious selection from the most polished English writers, together with many original pieces from American writers. Amongst the latter we find the names of Sprague, Bryant and Percival, in Poetry, and Everett, Webster and Channing in prose.

FOREIGN EXTRACTS.

FROM A LATE LONDON PAPER.

CAPTAIN FRANKLIN.—Captain Franklin and Doctor Richardson arrived here on Wednesday evening, from New York, and set off on Thursday for London. The rest of the party, under Captain Back and Lieutenant Kendall, were to return by the Hudson Bay Company's ships, and may be daily expected in the Orkney Islands. The expedition has been eminently successful. Captain Back, after sailing down the Mackenzie River, coasted westward to about the 150th degree west longitude. They met with no considerable indentation on the coast; but it gradually tended northward almost as far as they penetrated, to about latitude 62 degrees 30 minutes, when it seemed to run nearly west. At the furthest advance of this part of the expedition, they were about 150 miles separated from the ship Blossom, under Captain Beechey; and had each been aware of the circumstance, Captain Franklin might have returned to England by the Pacific Ocean; but, had they failed to meet, the season was so far advanced that it would have been an unjustifiable hazard of human life to have persevered in advancing westward.—Captain Franklin, therefore, very properly retraced his way back to Great Bear Lake, where they spent the last winter in the society of their friends, who, in the meantime, had under Doctor Richardson and Lieutenant Kendall, explored the whole coast between the Mackenzie and the Coppermine Rivers. The last portion of the American coast is more indented with bays than the former; and both have been surveyed and laid down by the adventurous travellers. Westward of the Mackenzie, the vast chain of the Rocky Mountains terminates about ten or twenty miles from the coast. The Esquimaux natives, at first suspicious or hostile, soon became friendly. Provisions were abundantly and liberally supplied by the Hudson's Bay Company; and it is more gratifying to think that this expedition has terminated without any loss of life, and that our gallant and indefatigable countrymen seem in excellent health, notwithstanding the numerous fatigues and privations which they had undergone. Their collections of natural history are large, especially in the department of botany, and the science will be enriched by several species. Their experiments on magnetism, and on the effects of the Aurora Borealis on the needle, are important, and will prove confirmatory of the observations of Lieutenant Foster.

Swimming School.—At Amburg, in Bavaria a swimming school had been established, and the papers give splendid accounts of the success of some of the scholars. The subdiers of a regiment of infantry were enabled to go down 24 feet under water, and swam about from an hour to an hour and a half. They jumped from an elevation of 39 feet, with their uniforms on, and bore at the same time the weight of 30 pounds. They found, and took from the bottom of the river, guns, muskets, &c. which had been lost there a long time before. Another experiment was made at Paessy. The best swimmers separated into three parties, and swam for a long time without touching the earth. The first party had in their centre a musician who played on the clarinet. Before them on a table was placed wine, and the swimmers drank to the health of the colonel who was on the bridge. The second party composed of officers, had before them a table covered with refreshments; the third also ranged themselves round the table. It is represented as a curious spectacle to see men eating and drinking and amusing themselves in the middle of a stream on tables the water bore up.

There is now in Paris, a female, named Elizabeth Thomas Gordeaux, a native of Savoy, who was born on the 5th of December, 1714; and who is, in all probability, the French car, the doyenne (the senior) of the human race. Her face is not more wrinkled than that of a female half her age, her sight is good, her appetite excellent, and she can walk ten miles a day without exhibiting fatigue; she does not make use of a stick to support herself; and it is really true that she has trudged all the way, on foot, from her native mountains to the metropolis of France. She passed through Lyons and Lyon, where she attended the Theatres at the desire of the managers, who made her a liberal compensation for the benefit they obtained from her presence, people coming from all parts to behold the senior of the human race. The aged dame has already been presented to the Dauphin, Dauphiness, and the young Duke of Bordeaux. She is to go the round of the theatres for her own benefit and that of the managers, who expect to reap a great profit from exhibiting her to the public.

The beautiful domain of Moor Park, in Hertfordshire, has just been purchased by the Earl of Grosvenor. What with his enormous estates in London and Westminster, (where his Lordship is erecting almost a new aristocratical capital,) in Cheshire, Flintshire and Denbighshire—at Shaftsbury, Hindon, Stockbridge, and numerous other places, the noble Earl, may, perhaps, be considered the richest land owner in Great Britain. His income is estimated at from 270,000*l.* to 300,000*l.* per annum, which sum, immense as it is, is exceeded by that of the Marquis of Stafford, in a great measure derived from canal property. One only of the Earl of Grosvenor's mining concerns in Wales is let by him to a company for 20,000*l.* per annum; and, within the last twenty five years, he has laid out more than 700,000*l.* on his family estate at Eaton, near Chester.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

On Monday and Tuesday, John W. Craig was tried before the United States' Circuit Court, and found guilty, for forging United States' Bank notes. Reuben Moses had previously been convicted in the same court of the same offence.

The Naval Court Martial, now sitting at the Navy Yard, is composed of the following officers:—Commodore Bainbridge, President, Com. Morris, Capt. Creighton, Capt. Cassin, Capt. Renshaw, Capt. Wadsworth, Capt. Ballard, Master Commandant Shubrick, Master Com'dt. Conner—Richard S. Coxe, Esq. Judge Advocate.

The people of Vermont are at this time much interested in a project for connecting lake Champlain with Connecticut River, by means of a rail-road. It is thought that the subject will be brought up before the Legislature at this present session.

General Samuel Houston, the new Governor of Tennessee, addressed his inaugural message to the legislature of that state on the 15th of October.

A Spanish frigate sailed from Havana on the 18th ultimo, for Cadiz with one million of dollars.

The Rev. Mr. Malcolm has relinquished the general agency of the American Sunday School Union, and accepted the pastoral care of the Federal street Babtist church, Boston.

Mr. Abercrombie, one of the gentlemen injured by the upsetting of the stage, by which Bishop Kemp met his death, has commenced a prosecution against the proprietors of the stage line, the drunken drivers having run off to escape a prosecution.

The London papers mention that within the short period of three years, nearly six hundred thousand pounds sterling worth of machinery, has been exported from England for the use of Foreign industry.

An apothecary died lately at Tarentum, in Italy, leaving behind him a picture gallery, the produce of which is expected to be little short of 200,000*l.*

The White Mountains in New Hampshire are covered with snow.

In Taunton, Massachusetts, Babbit, Crossman & Co. have undertaken to manufacture Britannia ware by steam. The coffee pots and tea pots made by them are said to equal any of those imported.

Commodore Thomas Tingey has, at his own request, been permitted to resign his seat at the board of Navy Commissioners and to resume his command of the Navy Yard at Washington.

The Governor of Ohio, has, by proclamation appointed Thursday, the 29th day of this month, as a day for public thanksgiving and prayer.

Mr. Forsyth, having been elected Governor of the state of Georgia, has resigned his seat in Congress, and Governor Troup has ordered an election on the 17th of present month to fill the vacancy.

It is proposed to build an arcade in the city of Pittsburgh.

The Winyaw Intelligencer states, that there have been several frosts at Georgetown during the past week, and that ice has been seen of the thickness of an eighth of an inch. We learn from the Savannah Georgian, that there has also been frost at that place.

At the late election in Georgia, the sense of the people was taken on the question of Convention or No Convention, for revising the constitution of the state, and determined in the negative, 19,623 votes against 10,467. The majority for Mr. Forsyth, for Governor, was 13,148 votes.

The amount of toll received this season, up to the first day of November, by John B. Stouts, Esq. collector at Albany, is one hundred and thirty-four thousand, three hundred and fifty-nine dollars.

The small steamboat Barnet, on her passage from New York to Hartford, when off Milford, burst her boiler, about three o'clock on Friday morning, and the pilot, Mr. Joseph Grumby, of Saybrook, was killed. There were no passengers on board.

There are now in the state of Maine 196 Baptist churches, 119 ordained ministers, 13 licentiates, and 12,029 church members. Net gain the past year, 484.

The Taunton, Mass. Reporter states that a woman in a neighboring town, afflicted with the tooth-ache, had recourse to the Oil of Tansey procured from an essence pedlar. Although but one or two drops were applied to the tooth, the effect was fatal—the woman surviving but a short time.

Among the subjects laid before the Legislature of New Jersey for consideration, is a petition signed by a great number of citizens, for a Rail road from opposite to Easton, on the Delaware, through Sussex, Warren, Morris, and Essex counties, to Elizabeth Town Point.

There were 13 deaths at Charleston (S. C.) from the 21st to the 26th, two of which were by yellow fever.

Mr. J. R. Reynolds is delivering a course of lectures at Boston, respecting his notions of the north pole and the earth's bowels. The papers speak well of his manner and the matter.

A radish was raised the present season in the garden of Doctor Noah Whitman of West Bridgewater, Mass. weighing nineteen pounds. Its length was twenty four inches, and its circumference half way from top to bottom, twenty two and a half inches.

The late accounts from the interior of Mississippi and Louisiana, represent the cotton crops as better in quantity than had been remembered for many years. The present season has been so dry, as greatly to favour the cotton planters.

Kiesewetter, the celebrated violin performer, died in London the 26th Sept.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature of New Jersey, for the safety of passengers travelling in steam boats and stages, containing some very wholesome regulations.

The Grand Lodge of Vermont lately voted a donation of one hundred dollars to the funds of the American Colonization Society; one of the subordinate Lodges in the same state, voted twenty dollars, and several others ten dollars each, to the same object.

A bill has been introduced into one branch of the Legislature of Tennessee, providing that females shall not be liable to imprisonment for debt.

The late Mr. Beddoes ascertained that butchers, who live more on animal food than other men, are rarely, if ever, liable to the disease of the lungs, termed pulmonary consumption.

THEATRICAL NOTICES.

Miss Clara Fisher will commence a short engagement at Norfolk, Va. on Monday next.

Mr. Cooper is to play four nights at the Bowery Theatre, New York, previous to his departure for Europe.

Young Kean was to appear in Norval on the London boards. His rehearsals gave great satisfaction, and his success is predicted as certain. His voice, it is said, is superior to his father's, but accompanied with a slight lisp.

The Theatre Porte Saint Martain, in Paris, says a London paper, overflows every evening, by the attraction of a melo drame, which exhibits the different stages of the Life of a Gamester, until his final and dreadful exit. We understand that Mr. Price is preparing the piece for representation at Drury Lane Theatre, and that the present proprietor of Mr. Wallack to Paris was for the express purpose of obtaining accurate drawings of the scenery and decorations, as well as witnessing the performance. Wallack will act the principal character in this drama.

Charles Kemble's attraction at the English Theatre in Paris, has been prodigious. The receipts have been nearly 200*l.* each evening that he has performed; and after deducting 100*l.* per night for the expence, Mr. Kemble receives a moiety of the remainder. When the Haymarket Theatre closes, Laporte goes to Paris, where silly enough, he is engaged to perform in the English Theatre.

Pleasant Entertainment.—Miss Lucinda Smith announces her benefit at the Surry Rotunda, Blackfriers bridge, London. Tickets three shillings, "including half a pint of wine." By Bacchus, if that were the custom here, we should never have a thin house or a dry audience.—Mark.

Lines written for the Signorina, by Mr. Keene of the New York Theatre, made by herself, and sung by her on the occasion of her Farewell Benefit.

FAREWELL.

Away, o'er the blue waves of ocean,
I go to my own native shores;
Yet this bosom will glow with devotion,
To the clime and the scenes it adores.
Round memory's shrine fondly lingers
The joys that have twin'd their bright spell;
And the harp that vibrates to these fingers,
Sighs in sadness the tones of farewell!
Farewell! Farewell!
Sighs in sadness the tones of farewell.

Where Italy's bright skies are shining,
And France, sunny France, spreads her bloom
This heart will look back with repining,
And its pleasures be saddened with gloom.
Deep throbbing emotions are breaking,
While my thoughts on your images dwell;
And my voice, as these notes are waking,
Breathes in sadness these notes of farewell!
Farewell! Farewell!
Breathes in sadness the notes of farewell.

EVENING POST.

PHILADELPHIA.

SATURDAY, NOV. 10, 1827.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The several contributions of esteemed correspondents handed us for publication through the week, are carefully filed, and will at an early day meet with proper attention.

It is only within a few, a very few years that Pennsylvania has evinced any tokens of having a just appreciation of her own strength, and like large animals not early used to motions, she has certainly evinced an awkwardness in bringing her powers into exercise.

It has been hinted by gentlemen conversant with our history that many hundred thousand dollars had been expended in Pennsylvania upon internal improvement, before the canal system was devised, and that hence the character of inertness that has been applied to our state was not deserved. We confess that in an examination of the legislative history, we see nothing that would denote legislative wisdom with regard to the application of funds to public improvement until within a few years—much money we agree has been expended, but it has been in so diffuse a manner as to have rendered its application of little or no avail, excepting perhaps to aid the "ways and means" of public contractors. In all efforts to effect any public benefit in our legislature, there has been evinced so much local jealousy and private views, as to defeat in a great degree the benefits intended by the measure—and, instead of bringing the funds voted, to operate with a salutary and extraordinary influence in a single place, they have been scattered with so single a hand, that comparatively little or no benefit is to result from the application of its numerous subdivisions. Hence, when we start with astonishment at the aggregate of public funds voted for public improvement, we are left to enquire with great wonder, where these funds have been applied.

Recent liberal provisions by the legislature of our state, to meet the demand for public improvement, is not to aid any former provisions, they have been swallowed up—the new fund commences the new work, and we have every promise of its being profitably expended—already we see the fruits of its diffusion in the immediate commencement and rapid progress of the portions of the canal authorized by the legislature—that from Binkhamtown to Pittsburgh—the central division from Middletown near Harrisburg, towards the mountains, and the more recently commenced division, to ascend the banks of the Delaware beginning at Bristol, and terminating a short distance from Yardley-ville.—Here then is the work begun aright, and with a comparatively small expenditure—we see something upon which we may depend, while former expenditures are almost totally unaccounted for by any real improvement.

But our citizens should consider this work but commenced—the great canal even when completed, is but the beginning of greater work that will convey to the east the rich productions of the west, and furnish in return the merchandize of our seaports—but every mile of the great canal will be intersected by branches, either of canal, or conveyances of rail roads by which the towns and villages upon our state shall communicate with the great thoroughfare, and the markets of the world—it is entirely impossible for any real benefit

MY SOLDIER LOVE.—Sung by MRS. FRENCH.

But if glorious from the wars,
Bonnie Laddie, Soldier Laddie!
Proud will I be of his scars,
Bonnie Laddie, Soldier Laddie!

By the sparkle of his e'e,—
Bonnie Laddie, Soldier Laddie!
None, I ken, he loves but me,
Bonnie Laddie, Soldier Laddie!

CHAPTER OF CLOAKS.

A COMIC SONG.

When I came to town lately, I found—'tis no joke,
Young and old, men and women, each wearing a cloak;
So thinks I, I will e'en do as other folks do,
To be in the fashion, I'll have a cloak too.
Tol de rol, &c.

Why not? for I'll prove in the course of life's pother,
We all of us wear a cloak some time or other;
For there is none but must own however great be his pride,
He has something 'tis sometimes convenient to hide.
Tol de rol, &c.

The Dandy, en militair, still wears his cloak,
And thinks a cigar, 'tis the tippy to smoke:
With his fine frill and brooches he makes a great show,
But take off his cloak—'tis all dickey, you know.
Tol de rol, &c.

Young Miss, with her beauty-spots, rouge, airs and graces,
In the knot of her cloak often carries two faces:
Her lover still swears she's an angel unconcern'd,
Till she throws off her cloak, when he finds she's a woman.
Tol de rol, &c.

The Lover, 'till wed, seems to court beauty's sway,
And swears he but lives her commands to obey.
But once tightly noos'd in the conjugal yoke,
'Tis do this and that Ma'am, for off goes his cloak.
Tol de rol, &c.

The Lawyer's cloak wears, as well as the Lover,
So many old suits he has always to cover;
His cloak once thrown off shows a great deal of evil,
For 'stead of the Lawyer, oh dear! there's the Devil.
Tol de rol, &c.

A BACHELOR'S DESK.

Nay, do not curl up the corners of your pretty mouths at me, sweet ladies—it may be worth while to take a peep at it. It is of the plain and quiet description, and very neatly and orderly arranged, both inside and out. The latter is kept bright and shining, by the indefatigable hands of Sally, the housemaid; who, while she breathes upon the plate to give it a polish, at the same time breathes a wish (to herself) that her breath possessed the magic power of unfastening locks, and so enabling her to see, "what the old gentleman keeps in this here box, to make him so fond of it."—The interior he takes infinite care to keep in complete and excellent order to himself. Each particular compartment has its appropriate contents consigned to it. The fold down nearest to him, as he sits at it, contains a small manuscript within a red Morocco case, of a placid and genteel feeling, whose original sleeps the ever in the bosom of the cold earth—a little fret containing a ring set with brilliants, and inclosing a lock of her hair—all her letters carefully tied up with green ribbon—a miniature edition of Shakespeare and Milton, with his name written in them in her hand writing. In the opposite fold, near the receptacle for the pens, wafers, ink, &c. are his own little writings, (for we are to suppose him fond of his pen, and as having occasionally indulged that fondness,) of all of which he preserves neat copies, some private memorandum, and an old pocket book given to him by his old friend and schoolfellow, Admiral ———, when he left England that year as a Midshipman. In the drawers are different letters from his friends; and, perhaps at the very back of it, a little hoard of gold pieces bright and new from the Mint.—Hone's Table Book.

The Interior of a Printing Office——Of all the shops, into which variety creeps, a Printing Office bears the Odd Nick. In pops one with a pickled peppered phiz, saying, stop my paper if you can't have it more regular to my house." Well the question then follows, "Where is your house?" "No. 965, Ague-fit-Lane, up five pair of stairs, in the S. S. West corner." The answer comes, "it shall be attended to," and off he goes to be succeeded by those who come to subscribe, to pay, or to dun. In the midst of this, walks round the printer's devil, as big as a Sexton at a funeral, crying, "Copy Sir!" Then the compositor respectfully asking whether certain hieroglyphics in manuscript, spells o-l-a-n-s, or o-l-a-c-a-s—then the click, click-click, of the types, as they clap them into the composing stick, and the rat-tat, rat-a-tat, of planeing down, as it is called, of the types—the entrance of foreign or distant newspapers,—the half-suppressed whistle of the workmen as they set up their task, perhaps of your favorite waltz—amid all this to write poetry, prose, sentiment, sarcasm, eclipse and go mad in one sense, requires a little beyond ordinary genius or abstraction. What is there better than when the press waits for an editor's pen, in this alarm of evils than to have some good natured friend pop in upon you, and hold you by the button for a two hours social chat, upon what brought not to be done by you, as to your editorial course? It is enough to make one laugh or scold, to be thus crazed, with such an odd concatenation of bothering circumstances. And yet if one line of the above written description should prove to be unprofitable, or ungrammatical, we should find a dozen critics like bull dogs, fastened at its throat, barking growling, and pulling, as if they had a legitimate right to murder it.—We wonder what these daily paper men do, in their spare time for their avocations. We should think that a toad under a harrow, comparatively speaking, was far more at his ease.

A few days ago, a gentleman and an Hibernian were riding together on the top of the Newark and Gradam coach, when the former missing his handkerchief, very rashly charged his fellow traveller with having stolen it, but finding it again, he had the good manners to beg pardon for the affront, saying it was a mistake, to which honest Pat replied with the greatest readiness—"Arrah my jewel, then it was a mutual mistake, you took me for a thief, and I took you for a gentleman."

A justice of the Irish King's Bench, in giving his decision on a certain will case, absolutely said, as he thought it very clear, that a testator intended to keep a life interest in the estate to himself."—The bar did not laugh outright; but Curran soon rendered that consequence inevitable. "Very true, my lord," said he, "very true! testators do secure life interest in themselves; but in this case, I rather think your lordship takes the wolf for the sheep."

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

The difficulty of applying rules to the pronunciation of our language may be illustrated in two lines, where the combination of the letters ough is pronounced in no fewer than seven different ways, viz. o, uf, of, up, aw, o, and ock

Though the tough cough and hiccough plough me through,
O'er life's dark lough my course I still pursue.

ANOTHER SUBJECT FOR THE LADIES.

Woman is as quick in unravelling puzzels as she is accomplished in the art of puzzling. We extract the following from an English paper, in hopes that some fair south germas to "Jonesia's son," may furnish an answer:

"There is a place on the surface of the earth, where if two men meet, the one shall find it so hot that he will immediately throw off his clothes through the heat, and the other shall find it so cold, that he will immediately put on those which the other has thrown off. What place is this?"

Jonathan's Description of a Steam Boat.

"It's got a saw mill on one side, and a grist mill on t'other, and a blacksmith's shop in the middle and down cellar there's a tarnation great pot boiling all the time."

THE CHOICE.

He slept beneath a poplar tree,
And three young maidens crown'd the way;
I listen'd to the lovely three,
And heard them to each other say—
"Now what is dearest, love to thee?"
The eldest said "Young Ranke's ring
Would be to me the dearest thing."
"No not for me," the second cried,
"I'll always the girdle from his side."
"Not I" the youngest said; "in truth,
I'd rather have the sleeping youth.
The ring, O sister, will grow dim;
The girdle will ere long be broken;
But this is an eternal token—
His love for me, and mine for him."

The patronage that the Casket has received, has exceeded our most sanguine expectations, but, if we mistake not, is unprecedented in the annals of monthly literature—This success has induced us to intend to give the work a more attractive form for the coming year, as well in its literary departments, as in its decorations and typographical arrangements. A new font of type has been procured, upon which it is to be printed; the size and number of the pages will be considerably extended and enlarged; and paper superior to that now used, will be employed in its publication; meantime, that every department may exhibit a corresponding degree of improvement, arrangements have been entered into with artists for various decorations and ornaments. The unusual number of copper-plates will be found, and it is proposed to furnish each number with two wood engravings, instead of one, as now published. The wood engravings representing scenes, or referring to incidents familiar or interesting to most of our readers, will be accompanied by well written descriptions of events and exhibitions connected with the picture—each reflecting upon the other's interest and value.

It is our intention to render the Casket interesting to the various classes of readers to whom periodical literature generally addresses itself; we shall then feel called upon to search, with renewed attention and assiduity, for the most interesting contents of foreign magazines, while a proper inducement will be held out for native writers to contribute a portion of their labours to enrich our Casket.

These regulations can be effected without any sacrifice of that light reading, and general magazine of small paragraphs, that must enter into all literary works; inasmuch as the size of the work will be very considerably enhanced—its contents, therefore, may assume a more diversified form, and boast an increase of solid matter.

The price of the Casket will be $3 50 per annum, payable within three months after the receipt of the 1st number—but, if the subscription is paid in advance, $2 50 will be received as payment in full.

The arrangements that we have made for the publication of the Casket, warrant us in assuring its patrons, that it shall equal, in attraction, any work of the kind that has been published; while its price is scarcely half that of the most ordinary monthly publications.

The Patrons of the Casket, who intend to continue the work after the present year, will please to intimate their wishes by sending up the subscription in advance—the increasing expenses of the paper, printing, engravings, &c. render it absolutely necessary for us to be furnished with the means of meeting expenditures promptly.

ATKINSON & ALEXANDER,
Philadelphia.

It may be well to state, that the "Casket for 1827," will form a distinct volume, at $3 50 per annum; and, on its completion, contain thirty-six splendid engravings, with nearly 500 pages of letter-press printing, constituting one of the cheapest publications in the United States. A few of the numbers can be supplied to future subscribers.

Those Editors who have already politely favoured us with a notice of the work, will enhance the obligation, and entitle themselves to another copy of it by giving this a few insertions.

PULMEL,

A Specific Remedy to Cure and Prevent the CONSUMPTION.

THIS valuable new remedy has lately been discovered by a gentleman of great Medical, Botanical and Chemical knowledge, in Philadelphia. It has been tested effectually in curing this formidable disease, by removing gradually all the symptoms, and also in preventing the connection of the system to be liable to it.

The PULMEL is a kind of artificial honey or sugar, formed by the chemical combination of several powerful vegetable substances, acting on the lungs and the whole system, at common weather mercury, which you have, nor any other poisonous substance. The mixed will operate sweet, balmy and pleasant; it may be used in any way, and seem to linger about without injury but the best way to take it onwards, is largely diluted in tea, chocolate, arrow-root, or lemon. A spoonful or two of PULMEL in the morning, and evening.

When the lungs are affected the PULMEL must be breathed or inhaled very often, in any convenient way, either by boiling a spoonful of it slowly under the nostrils and open mouth, or throwing it on coals and inhaling the smoke; or dissolving it in ether and breathing the vapour of the solution.

The carried diet must be adhered to, while using the PULMEL, which is commonly prescribed to consumptive patients. No steam air pipes must be taken at the same time; cold and exposure must be avoided; chalybeates, the milk diet, the lichen, exercise, [and blisters in some cases,] will be useful auxiliaries; [feeding and the digestion may be promoted sparingly when inflammation, pleurisy, or hemoptysis appear, and substance used for the night sweats.

From 5 to 20 pounds of PULMEL will effect a radical cure, according to the state of the patient, and the stage of the disease; in the worst state the ulcers of tubercles will be healed by a cicatrization. Thus a great majority of the cases will terminate happily and at least 4 out of 100 patients can be saved; this is a desideratum long sought for in vain.

The PULMEL sells for $2 the pound by the Agents appointed to retail it, and $1 50 by wholesale.—As the manufacture is tedious, orders for it must be sent beforehand to the Editors of the Saturday Evening Post, and the demand will be supplied with as much. All that was made is already sold or engaged.

oct 28—tf

JOHN P. FIRENG'S,

Wholesale Jewelry Manufactory,

Is removed from No. 476 North Second street, to No. 228 North Fifth street, above Race street, where he intends to carry on the above business.

N. B. All orders to this line of business will be thankfully received and punctually attended to. Oct. 6—3m*

PIANO FORTES,

MANUFACTURED, repaired, and tuned, in a satisfactory manner, (if not there will be no charge,) by CONRAD MEYERS,
No. 241, North Front Street,
Or a line addressed to him and left at this Office, or at the Post Office, will be promptly attended to. july 14

SECOND CLASS OF THE Grand Literature Lottery.

J. I. COHEN, Jr. & BROTHERS, of Baltimore, have the pleasure to announce the Second Class of this Lottery, authorized by the General Assembly of Maryland, for the promotion of science and literature. The number of tickets (only Ten Thousand) is considerably less than any lottery for many years, and gives to the Adventurer an increased chance for the Capital Prizes. The drawing will take place in the city of Baltimore on Wednesday the 10th of December next, and will be completed on that day under the superintendence of the Commissioners appointed by the Governor and Council.

Highest Prizes,

10,000 DOLS. 5,000 DOLS. &C.

SCHEME.

1 Prize of	$10,000 is	$10,000 Dollars.
1	5,000	5,000 Dollars.
1	3,000	3,000 Dollars.
1	2,000	2,000 Dollars.
1	1,000	1,000 Dollars.
8	500	4,000 Dollars.
10	100	1,000 Dollars.
20	50	1,000 Dollars.
50	20	1,000 Dollars.
100	5	500 Dollars.
3000	¾	12,000 Dollars.

3188 Prizes, amounting to 38,000 Dollars

☞ Only 10,000, Tickets in the Scheme!!

The CASH for the whole of the prizes can be had, as usual at Cohen's Office, the moment they are drawn.
Whole Tickets, - - - $3 00 | Quarters, - - - - - $1 25
Halves, - - - - - - - 2 25 | Eighths, - - - - - - 62

*☞ Orders from any part of the United States, either by mail (post paid) or private conveyance, enclosing the cash or prize Tickets in any of the lotteries, will meet the same prompt and punctual attention as if on personal application. Address to

J. I. COHEN, Jr. & BROTHERS, Baltimore.

☞ In the first class of the Literature lottery, Drawn on the 17th Oct. Both the Great Capitals of 30,000 and 20,000 Dollars, besides no less than Sixteen of 2,000 and 1,000 Dollars, were all sold at COHEN'S Office, No. 118 Market street, where more Capital prizes have been sold than at any other office in America.

Baltimore, Nov. 1, 1827. nov 3—4t

BARTLESON & HARMER,

N. E. CORNER OF SECOND & PINE STREET,

HAVE on hand, an extensive assortment of GREEN VENITIAN BLINDS, which they offer low for cash. They also keep a vast number of the most fashionable well made BEDS, of various sizes, equal to any ever offered for sale on this continent. july 7—tf

"Tales for Leisure Hours,"

COMPRISING twelve articles, a volume of 163 pages, neatly bound in boards, price 50 cents, or 75 cents extra binding, may be had of CAREY, LEA and CAREY, S. E. corner of Chesnut and Fourth; JUDAH DOBSON, No. 108 Chesnut street and at this Office.

TO RENT,

A LARGE ROOM, in a central part of the city, near the Post Office, suitable for a Seminary, or Mechanical business. Rent low. Enquire at this Office. oct 20—tf

FOR SALE.

A SECOND hand FIRE ENGINE in complete order. 7 1-2 in. Chambers, plays from 120 to 130 feet, will be disposed of low, by making application to either of the Committee:

JOHN SINGLE, Sen. 83 Race street.
HENRY CHESSMAN, 139 North 4th street, or to CHARLES KEY BAKER, 201 Race street.
oct 20—3m

INCORRUPTIBLE TEETH.

VAN FELT & MILLIKENNY, Dentists and Incorruptible Teeth Manufacturers, No. 141 Walnut, between Third and Fourth streets, request the attention of the Public to the following certificates:

"We the subscribers having examined specimens of Incorruptible Teeth, manufactured by Van Felt & Millikenny, Dent) ts of Philadelphia, feel no hesitation in recommending them to the public, as possessing in a superior degree, the qualities of cleanliness, durability, and beauty of form and colour.

JAMES RUSH, M. D.
JAMES M'CLE, M. D.
R. CALHOUN, M. D.
JOHN G. THOMAS, M. D.
RICH'D HILMOT HALL,
M. D. Professor of Obstetrics in the Baltimore Medical College.
THOMAS P. JONES, M. D.
Professor of Chemistry in the Franklin Institute.
R. M. PATTERSON, M. D.
Professor of Natural Philosophy and Chymistry in the University of Pennsylvania.
JOS. PARRISH, M. D.
GEO. M'CLELLAN, M. D.
Professor of Surgery in the Jefferson College.

Specimens of the Teeth may be seen at their office, where all operations connected with their profession, will meet with prompt and particular attention.
nov 3—tf

Mr. Milford's Anodyne Drops,

FOR the instantaneous cure of the Tooth-ache 50 cents. LOTION, for Scorbutic gums, and fattening loose Teeth, 50 cents. Powder, for the preservation of the Teeth, 25 cents. Sold at the N. W. corner of Locust and 8th sts. N. W. corner of Pine and 8th sts. and 128 South 2d street.
oct 6—tf*

CANARY, MOCKING & RED BIRDS.

A LARGE collection of Canary, Mocking and red BIRDS for sale at No. 175 Cherry st. the first house above 6th st. feb 3—y

THE FEMALE'S SPECIFIC.

IT HAS NEVER FAILED.

THIS Medicine, the never failing powers of which can be proved by reference to ladies of the greatest respectability in this city. Can always be had at No. 168, FINE STREET, where application can be made either by letter, or personally. march 10—6m

TOBACCONISTS—Look Here!!

IS offered at private sale, that old established TOBACCO MANUFACTURING Establishment, by the subscriber, who wishes to discontinue business, together with all his tools; every part of the property is in good order, situate in the village of New Leyps, 16 miles east of Bordentown. Information may be obtained of Jacob E. Morris.
Wm. W. TOLLEN.
Oct 27—3t*

Mr. Milford's Anodyne Drops,

FOR the instantaneous cure of the Tooth-ache 50 cents. LOTION, for Scorbutic gums, and fattening loose Teeth, 50 cents. Powder, for the preservation of the Teeth, 25 cents. Sold at the N. W. corner of Locust and 8th sts. N. W. corner of Pine and 8th sts. and 128 South 2d street.
oct 6—tf*

DANCING SCHOOL,

At the Masonic Hall, Chesnut Street.

A. BONNAFFON most respectfully informs his friends and patrons, that his dancing school commenced on Monday, the 15th of October, and will continue during the season, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 5 o'clock P. M. for Young Ladies, at 8 for Young Gentlemen, and at 7 for Gentlemen. Cotillion Parties every other Friday during the season, to which scholars will have the privilege of attending without any extra charge. The Grand Officers of the Grand Ladies have very kindly consented in connection with A. B. to make these assemblies the most splendid and desirable of any on that day, either for assemblies, concerts, dinners, or any other entertainments, and for which the above apartments will be rented, when occupied by A. B. A subscription book for the Cotillion parties is now opened at the Hall, where application to A. B. can be made at any time.

F. Johnson and Rand are engaged for the Cotillion parties, and every other occasion during the season. The other three days of the week will be devoted for private tuition, and to such of those Seminaries as may think proper to patronize him.
oct 20—tf

To Country Merchants and Others.

JOHN BEMENT & CO.

No 3, north Third Street

(Successors to the late Mr. Samuel Hoffman,)

RESPECTFULLY inform the Customers of the late Mr. Samuel Hoffman, as well as the public in general, that they have now on hand, a large and general assortment of Tortoise Shell, Tuck, Neck, and Side Combs, 4,000 dozen imitation Tuck do. in various sizes. Also, Ivory, Crescent, Dressing, Reading, Side, Neck, Long, and Pocket Combs, of various sizes and qualities, which they offer for sale, at the above ancient and establishment—at wholesale only—for cash or approved paper. Country Merchants and others are requested to call and examine the assortment.

All orders attended to with despatch.

N. B. Cash and the highest price given for Country and Spanish Horns. sept 29—3m

NOTICE TO EVAN DAVID.

WHEREAS JOSHUA DAVID of Newcastle, Del. deceased, deceased by his last Will and Testament, a share of his property to his brother Evan David as can be should he living, this is to give notice to the said Evan David to come here and claim his share of the said property.

Published pursuant to the last Will and Testament of Joshua David.
ELISHA DAVID,
Newcastle county, Del.
June 16—1y*

Straw Bonnet Manufactory.

MRS. E. HENLEY,

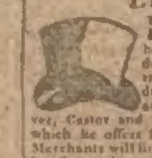
No 1, North Second Street,

CONTINUES to Manufacture Straw and Gimp Cottage Bonnets, of fashionable patterns. She has an hand English straw hats of the newest fashion. American straw and gimp cottage bonnets. Leghorn flats and crowns, do. Bonnet hats, men's and boy's Leghorn. Senegrass and Manilla hats, pink, blue, white and black ostrich, do. do. mamma gauze, furniture and other fancy ribbons, plain satten and taffety do. piping cords, and a great variety of Millinary trimmings, straw plait and chain gimp, by the single yard or larger quantity.

N. B. Country Merchants and Milliners supplied on liberal terms.

ALSO—A variety of Ladies' Cloaks, Boy's and Miss's do. Also, Circassian, Tartan, and Camblet plaids, at very reduced prices. sept 15—9t

LEWIS TEESE,



FASHIONABLE HAT MANUFACTURER, No. 18 South Third st below Chesnut street, where hats of any description may be obtained by Wholesale and Retail, which, for beauty and durability, and excellence of materials, are equal to any in the city. Fine Beaver, Castor and Bearen Hats; also, Imitation Beaver, which he offers for sale at very low prices. Country Merchants will find it their interest to call, as the subscriber flatters himself he will give general satisfaction.

An elegant assortment of short nap brown hats; gentlemen that are in the habit of wearing short napt hats are invited to call and examine them.

N. B.—Hats of any shape or quality made to order on the shortest notice. June 9—tf

GEORGE W. FARR,

WOOLLEN DRAPER & TAILOR,

No. 204 MARKET STREET,

Next door above the Red Lion Hotel.

HAS received by late arrivals from London an elegant assortment of blue, black, olive, claret, brown, green, brown, mixed, and a variety of fancy coloured Cloths and Cassimeres, Mixts, Lewis, Wilk & Henry manufacture. Also, a variety of English black and blue Silk Vestings, Barcelonas, plain and figured Marseilles, fancy and plain Silk Velvet, Tuffeneti, Valencia figured and plain Cravats, plain and ruffled linen and cotton Shirts, Collars, &c. Gloves, Stockings, English and German Silk Handkerchiefs, all of which will be sold from ten to fifteen per cent. lower than they can be purchased in the United States. Medical students, Country Merchants and others visiting the city, will please to call and examine the above.

N. B. One years credit will be given to all regular dealers, or a liberal discount for cash. march 24—1y

LIST OF LOTTERIES,

Soon to be Drawn.

WASHINGTON City Consolidated, Capital $20,000 —On Wednesday next, 31st inst.

New York Consolidated, Class No. 9, Capital prize $10,000 Nov. 7th (only a few tickets.)

Delaware and North Carolina Consolidated Lottery, Class No. 1, Capital $15,00, 16th Nov.

Union Canal, Class No. 34, Capital $10,000, on the 14th Nov.

For information respecting the above Lotteries, please call at B. DAVIS & CO'S Office, 34 North Third st. opposite Heskell's Hotel. Oct 27—3t

Recollect Adventurers, Money in the MARKET!!

ON the 14th of 21 month, will be distributed from the handsome 34th Union Canal Lottery, a rare deal of money in lots, comprising the handsome sums of $10,000, 2,500 1,250, 1160, &c. a choice of cheap tickets for sale at CONNER'S

Truly fortunate Office, No. 3, south 3d street.

☞ PAY ATTENTION!—The place where wealth has been, and continues to be distributed, is at No. 3, south 3d street, where but few in vain seek for prizes.

☞ The drawing of the 17th Monument Lottery, which draws this day week, will be received on next Tuesday week. Oct 27—3tf

MOSS & WALTON,

UPHOLSTERERS,

And Venetian Blind Makers.

RESPECTFULLY inform their friends and the public, that they have commenced business in the above line, at No. 201 Walnut street, between 6th and 7th streets. M. & W. in soliciting a share of their favours, beg leave to state that every exertion will be used, by punctuality and despatch in the execution of Orders entrusted to them, to afford general satisfaction. Parlour Drawing Room, and Bed Furniture, made up and fixed in the latest Newspaper style. nov 3—t

69, CHESNUT STREET.

THE following are the drawn numbers of the Union Canal Lottery, 34th Class, drawn in this city on Wednesday, 31, 28, 21, 6, 23, 0, 35, 42.

Combination 0, 21, 31, and 0, 23, 21—two of the Capitals were sold, as usual, at

LEVY'S,
69 Chesnut, 3d door below Third street.

Where either of them put money is always taken at par for tickets, or bought at a low rate. Orders from the country will meet with prompt and despatch. Gold bought and sold. oct 13—tf

TO PRINTERS.

FOR sale, three 120 lb. PICA GREEK, Robinson's cast, but only been used to print 300 copies of a pamphlet; 40 pages—price very low.

ALSO—300 lbs. PEARL TYPE, mostly Roman on a Cast, has been used only in Stereotyping—will be put up in small founts to suit purchasers—very low.

ALSO—270 lbs. LONG PRIMER, White's No. 1.

A very extensive and beautiful assortment of BOURGEOIS and Borders of all descriptions, &c.

An assortment of Mathers PRINTING INK.

Apply at J. HOWE'S
Stereotype Foundry and Printer's Warehouse, corner of Crown and Cathedral streets.

Applications by mail must be post paid.
march 13—tf

JUST PUBLISHED,

And for Sale by DAVID CLARK, No. 118 North Fourth Street, Philadelphia,

DR. WATT'S

PSALMS AND HYMNS,

ARRANGED by Dr. RIPPON, with Dr. Rippon's Selection, in one volume, with two handsome engravings; printed on very fine paper, from New Stereotype plates, and strongly bound, at $1. per copy. To Ministers and others who purchase large quantities, a liberal discount will be made. May 11, 1827—y

STUCKERT'S DRUG STORE,

Where Medical advice will be given for the administration to the constitution. Also, for the cure of every description

No. 33 N. FOURTH STREET,

Halfway between Cherry and Race streets, west side

STUCKERT'S PANACEA.

AFTER taking of disease of every kind, in children or grown persons the Panacea will create a new and healthy action in the system. The most respectable certificates can be produced as to its efficacy in destroying all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood, morbid action in the system, constitutional syphilis, mercurial diseases, scrofula, liver complaint, sore throat, king's evil, ulcers, tumors, pimples or eruptions on the face, rheumatism, tetter, and general debility. It is an excellent medicine for creating an appetite, also for relaxations of the stomach, and derangement of the constitution.—Price 75 cents per quarter bottle.

Stuckert's Anti-Bilious Pills for foul stomach, headache, costiveness, and bilious habits.—Small box 6 cents, large 25.

Stuckert's Ague and Fever Drops.—Small bottles 18 3-4 large do. 37½.

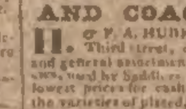
Stuckert's Pearl Powder, for destroying pimples on the face, and whitening the skin.—Small papers 6 cents, large do. 12 1-2.

Stuckert's Scorbutic Tooth Powder, for preserving and whitening the teeth.—Small boxes 6 cents, large do 12 1-2.

Stuckert's All-in-all-ache Powders for Head ache, Heartburn, and Acidity or Sourness of the Stomach.

Stuckert's Tooth-Ache Drops—37 1-2 cents per bottle.
oct 13—tf

FOR TRENTON.



THE Steam Boat PENNSYLVANIA, Capt. E. W. Kellum, leaves Arch street wharf every morning at 6 o'clock, A. M. for Bristol, where coaches will be in readiness to convey passengers to Trenton, and return in time for the boat the same day. Fare—up or down, 75 cents.

For seats apply at the Office No. 3 Arch street, or of the Captain on board the boat. For seats in Trenton apply at David Green's inn, or Joseph W. Vansleve's inn Trent n.

Philada. Oct 20—tf JOHN STEVENS,
Proprietor Bristol, Pa.

FORTUNE'S HOME,

P. CANFIELD'S

No. 139 CHESNUT STREET.

HAS the pleasure of presenting to his friends and the public the following beautiful scheme of the Union Canal Lottery, 34th Class, which draws on the 14th day of November next:

SCHEME.

1 prize of	$10,000	50 prizes of	$100
1 do.	2,500	51 do.	70
1 do.	1,500	51 do.	60
1 do.	1,160	51 do.	50
2 do.	1,000	51 do.	do
8 do.	500	102 do.	40
4 do.	400	1530 do.	8
10 do.	300	11475 do.	4
10 do.	200

Tickets $5, shares in proportion. Orders from a distance (enclosing the cash or prize tickets) will be promptly attended to, if addressed to

P. CANFIELD,
No. 139, Chesnut street.

Mr. Plantou's Incorruptible ARTIFICIAL TEETH,

APPROVED by the Medical Society and the Franklin Institute, are to be well known to need eulogium. Experience has proved them to be far superior to any other kind of artificial teeth. He performs also, all operations relative to his profession at a reasonable charge.

DRAWING.—His wife continues to take Likenesses in oil and Miniature, and to teach the Ladies the art of Drawing, at south Fourth, corner of Prune street.
sept 20—3m*

SADDLERY, HARNESS, AND COACH FURNITURE.

H. & P. A. HUBER, offer for Sale, at No. 42 North Third street, opposite Heiskell's Hotel, a large and general assortment of imported and American articles, used by saddlers, harness and coach makers, at the lowest prices for cash or acceptances—consisting of all the varieties of plated, brass, tinned, japanned steel, iron, wood, woollen, cotton, and linen furniture, together with a constant supply of hog skins. June 23—tf

JOHN B. JEWELL,

House & Sign Painter, & Glazier,

No. 72, Chesnut St.

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public in general that he still continues the business at the old stand, where all orders will be thankfully received and duly appended.

N. B. One or two apprentices wanted to the above business. Oct 27—6t

PAINTING & GLAZING.

JAMES WILSON, of the late firm of Powell & Wilson, House Painters and Glaziers, would respectfully inform his friends and those of the late firm, and the public in general, that he has commenced business on his own account at No. 52 Walnut street, a few doors above Dock street, where he hopes, by strict attention to business, with a determination to give satisfaction, to merit a continuance of those favours which have been bestowed towards him.
nov 3—6t

YATES, & CO.

The following Capital Prizes were Sold and Paid, in the last Union Canal Lottery, at this Office:

5, 21, 23, 6 Prize of $2,000, one quarter.
5, 9, 25, do. 2,000, do.
9, 23, 33, do. 2000, do.

UNION CANAL LOTTERY.

THIRTY FOURTH CLASS—NEW SERIES.

To be drawn on the 14th Nov.

Which contains a number of Capitals, among which are the following, viz.

1 prize of $10,000 DOLLARS,
1 2,500 DOLLARS,
1 1,250 DOLLARS,
1 1,160 DOLLARS,
2 1,000 DOLLARS,

Besides others, amounting to upwards 100,000 Dollars.

Whole Tickets, - - - $4 00 | Quarters, - - - - $1 00
Halves, - - - - - - 2 00 | Eighths, - - - - - 50

Tickets and Shares for sale by YATES, & CO.
No. 132 Chesnut Street.

The following Prizes have all been sold and paid at this Office within a few weeks, viz:—

28, 35, 50, $10,000—14, 8, 38, 10,000—15, 9, 3, 10,000—15, 29, 40, 5,000—7, 8, 14, 5,000—20, 28, 34, 3,000—10, 14, 31, 2,500—21, 39, 41, 2,000—7, 23, 34, 1,500.

Together with 38 of $1,000, 61 of 500, &c. &c.

☞ Orders from the country promptly attended to. All Lottery and exchange information given gratis.
Oct 27—tf

"All's well that ends well."

"In the rude story marks that make the truth."

"But the plain single verse, that is now true."

WEDNESDAY the Drawing of the Union Canal Lottery, 34th Class, took place, which gave to the fortunate the City Officer, a number of splendid prizes. Numbers drawn from the wheel:

51 25 21 5 38 9 33 43.

Holders of prizes are requested to call and receive their cash, at either of the City Offices, N. E. Corner of Chesnut and Fourth street, and 69 South Third street.
oct 6—tf JOHN DOLBY.

REMEDY FOR HUNGER!

"I'M hungry"—said poor Jack one day,
"I've gone about the rules."—
"Oh! there," said I, "without delay,
Go and send down with "GIBBS."

For hungry folks, there's nought like gold,
All else is fare and trouble;
So ere the prices all are sold,
Steer right away for "GIBBS."

Let others boast of all their store,
Their dollars and their cribs;
For heaps of gold, just ope the door
That leads to lucky GIBBS."

Then set your canvass to the gale,
Your topsails and your jibs,
And steering straight, you'll never fail,
To reach the port of "GIBBS."
oct 13—tf

INSOLVENT NOTICES.

INSOLVENT Debtor's Bonds and final Petitions for the next Court, and all other writings and advice connected therewith, correctly and legally attended to, until discharged by the Honorable Judges of the Court. Those persons who will be obliged to avail themselves of the Insolvent Laws of this Commonwealth, at the approaching term, and wish to have their business done in a proper and legal manner, will please apply at No. 8, south Fifth street, third door below Minor street.

CHARLES P. LESLY.

Professional services, in case of opposition, will be rendered if required.

N. B. Office open until 8 o'clock, P. M.
aug 4—1yr

MILLINERY.

MRS. N. WADE, will open on Thursday the first day of November, an assortment of fashionable Millinery, at

No. 153, South Second Street
oct 27—3t*

PULMONARY

BALSAM,

FOR THE CURE of Diseases of Pulmonary Consumption, asthma, Chronic Inflammation of the Pneumonia and Tubercles on the Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Spitting of Blood and Catarrhal Affections of the Throat. PREPARED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

DR. E. M. SMITH,

No. 15, S. Twelfth street, 2d door above Chesnut, Philad.

The proprietor is perfectly aware of the variety of Medicines that have already been offered to the public, as well as the unexpected improvements that have been effected upon the afflicted. To offer the Pulmonic Balsam as a cure for a variety of diseases, would no doubt be considered by the understanding of an enlightened community. The proprietor therefore wishes to restrict his recommendation to one case of disease only, in order to obviate any imputation which, he trusts, he shall have no cause of application to attach, either from the reproach of the afflicted, or the censure of others.

It has been admitted, that consumption alone, makes up above one-sixth part of the bills of mortality; and there is much reason to believe, that this is far short of the number of deaths immediately connected with the pulmonary organs. This great number should create no surprise, when we reflect that there is scarcely any other complaint of the whole human system, which has not, some time or other, terminated in this most destructive malady. A disease which is seated in the most delicate and vital part of the system, the very main-spring of life, must necessarily have elicited the wholy skill and attention of the most learned physicians; and their mode of treatment have been as various as they have been numerous, to the hopes of the unfortunate. The discovery of a remedy so very desirable in this class of inflammation, would be one of the most valuable boons that could be conferred upon afflicted world. This great desideratum, the proprietor believes he has, as nearly as the unavoidable claims of mortality will permit, supplied in his Pulmonary Balsam. The proprietor trusts, that the well wishes and efforts of the humane and benevolent, in relieving distress, and eradicating disease, will meet the commendation and support of every other friend to the unfortunate.

The Pulmonary Balsam is a pleasant liquid, and perfectly safe for the most debilitated constitution, and free from any injurial preparation whatever.

TESTIMONIALS.

The subscribers being persuaded of the merits of Dr. E. M. Smith's Pulmonary Balsam, and feeling that gratitude which is natural to feel towards the man who, under Providence, has been the means of raising them from infirmity and wretchedness, to a state of health and comfort, have determined to make known their individual cases, for the benefit of those who may be afflicted with similar complaints.

Having been severely afflicted with a disease of the lungs, attended with alarming symptoms, and failing to obtain a cure from any of the various remedies to which I had recourse, I applied to Dr. E. M. Smith, who in a short time effected what to me appeared to be a permanent cure, by the use of his Pulmonary Balsam, having been in good health for the last nine months.

Philad. Jan 27, 1827. JOHN DOBY,
No. 10, Arch Street.

This is to certify, that I for five years past have been afflicted with the Asthma to a distressing degree. I had tried numerous remedies, and used much medical advice, without effecting a cure—In this state I applied to Dr. Smith—obtained some of his Pulmonary Balsam, and in the space of twenty-four hours was sensibly relieved by continuing the medicine a few days, I was restored to perfect health, which I have now enjoyed for five months. HANNAH LINDLY,
Widow, Charles Castle No. 114, N. Fifth Street.

Philad. Jan. 27, 1827.

This may certify, that I had been for some time in a declining state of health, when, in the year 1824, my disease assumed a more alarming aspect—I became subject to all the symptoms attendant on pulmonary consumption, and was reduced to what my physician considered an incurable state. In this condition my case was made known to Dr. E. M. Smith, who recommended the Pulmonary Balsam. I commenced using it, and by taking five bottles I was restored to a perfect state of health, which I have enjoyed for